THE DELUDED #METOOING OF A BOOKTUBE STAR

Tattooist and Sex Worker Naomi S. King's Sexual Assault Allegations Against Booktuber and Author Daniel B. Greene, Complete from 2023 to 2025

Naomi and Daniel meet online and became friends, for two years.

In 2020 Naomi King, a prolific YouTuber, met American influencer Daniel B. Greene online, and they became correspondents. Shortly after Covid, Naomi discretely became a sex worker known as a "sugar baby," who makes medium-term arrangements with one sugar daddy at a time. Daniel lives with Korean-American fiancée and manager, Kayla Torrison, in New York. His videos had 70,000,000 views as of 2022.

In 2021 Daniel helped Naomi to promote her self-published book, and he wrote it a glowing review on Amazon. He encouraged his 500,000 followers to rate it with five stars and review it. The first review was written the day after publication, before the book could be printed. Another reviewer said she is looking forward to reading the book soon.

In 2022 Naomi was in an arrangement with middle-aged married man, Kel, and Daniel was living with Kayla. Daniel visited Naomi for three days—a platonic visit. She lived with her friend, so they had no privacy.

Daniel invites Naomi to Las Vegas to have an affair, with compensation. She accepts.

In 2023, on January 22, Daniel invited Naomi to Las Vegas. He offered to pay for her trip, share his bed, "spoil" her as a "friend," and give her some money, which she wanted for a tattoo. Naomi accepted his offer.

Naomi reads Daniel a letter that neither confirms nor denies sex, and urges him to reveal their affair to his partner.

On March 29, Naomi read this eight-page letter to Daniel in a video:

> Daniel, I'm going to start this off with: I can't wait to hang out with you in Vegas. Can't wait to just talk and smoke weed and explore and eat. Don't let any of this convince you otherwise. That being said, I'll get to it. There are so many conflicting feelings here.
>
> On one hand, I'm happy to be your friend forever. And just talk. And hang out. And smoke weed, explore new cities, talk about our books and worlds and lives. I want to meet your cat. And steal him. On another hand, I want to hug you. And cuddle you. And kiss your face. And tell you how pretty you are. And how I have thought to myself numerous times about how you're going to age like fine wine.
>
> But on the other hand, I feel disgusting. I feel horrible. Like a whore. I feel disgusting because you committed to a monogamous relationship with a wonderful girl, and you're cheating every time we talk. I feel dirty because she [Kayla] has no idea what's going on. And she thinks you love her. You and I have been more than friends since the day we started talking. But I'm so on edge, all the time. Because, my feelings aside, you give me whiplash.
>
> You say I'm a friend but we barely talk. Then, every couple months when we haven't spoken, you pop up out of the woodwork to confess your feelings, tell me you're miserable in your relationship , tell me you've thought about breaking up with her multiple times, and straight up say you want to start an affair. Then you disappear. You come to me with your feelings. You come to me with grand ideas of secret rendezvous. You come to me to plan and book. And then you bail. Last year, you called me out of the blue and told me to fly to Utah because you'd gotten there two days early and were bored. I assumed I was just the hot sidepiece you were hoping to fuck from time to time.
>
> You say you want to cheat, and then you say you don't. You say you want to ram your cock down my throat and that you think about me when you fuck her and that you want an affair. Then you say you could never betray her and have the audacity to play it off like you're taking the moral high ground. And then of course, within a couple months, you've changed your mind. Again. You go between being a friend, to not being there at all, to wanting to set up an arrangement and fuck me for forty-eight hours straight. You want to be rough and dirty and do and say filthy things, but the moment it could happen, suddenly there's an issue with it and you don't like it anymore.
>
> It feels like you're just stuck in an unhappy relationship and I'm the one you project all your fantasies onto. So you dream and you imagine. And you even tell me about it from time to time. And you get really into the idea, too. But the moment you realize it could actually happen, the moment I'm like, "alright, fine, let's do this", you no longer want it. You like the idea until it's an actual possibility. You like the idea of me but you panic the second you realize it could actually happen. And I'm pretty sure, if I'd said yes back then, when you were still trying to get me to move to Richmond [Virginia], you'd probably just be fucking me, and fantasizing about her instead. And to that I'm sure you'll be upset, and you'll say that's not how you feel at all, and you don't want me to think you do. But can you blame me?

Now, for this next part, I am saying this as your friend. And as Kayla's friend, even though I have never met her. I am saying this as someone that genuinely cares about what is happening to her. Kayla's situation hits really close to home for me. I moved to Australia for love. I was in Singapore with tickets booked for Vancouver. Then I met a boy and fell in love and that plane turned the fuck around. I know what it's like to move somewhere for love and never settle in. I know what it's like to have every person in my life come from someone else's life. I know what it's like to have my partner's family say snippy things and make me feel incredibly alone. I know what it's like to be completely dependent on someone in a city where I have nobody else. I know what it's like to have friends and a job, but to never really have friends or a job that I enjoy. A lot of the reasons you're not happy with Kayla are the same reasons my ex wasn't happy with me: I never dressed up, I never wanted to go out and show off, I wasn't enough of a freak in the bedroom.

Who I am now is who my ex would have wanted to cheat with then. He always wanted me to be fit and tanned, and God did he put emphasis on asses and building glutes. When we were talking the other day, about the photos you jerk off to, you mentioned the butt photos. And it gave me flashbacks, to when my ex husband would always be staring at other girl's asses. And when he cheated, and I was asking all the sordid details, he mentioned that when they got to her house and were making out in the kitchen, he glanced up and saw them in a reflection, and he talked about his hands on her ass. I keep having flashbacks. This is hitting me so fucking close to home.

l honestly thought that you wanted to be with her, and stay with her in the long-run, and have her be your cute domestic wife. I honestly thought you just want to hang out, hoping to fuck me from time to time to get your kicks and satisfaction. I thought you had the whole Madonna-whore complex figured out. Your clear Madonna, and your clear whore. When I asked you what your dream scenario was, I expected you to say, "Never break up with Kayla, but also have you". Instead, you said, "Dream scenario, I'm dating you, and Kayla is my best friend." You told me you've thought about breaking up with her multiple times over the last two years, and the only reason you didn't was because she moved there for you. Because of her life setup, or lack thereof. And now your plan is to break up with her … two years from now.

If you know, and have known, that you will break up with her in the end, what the fuck are you doing? The longer you wait to tell her, the worse it is going to be. The longer you lie, the worse it is going to be. You think it'll be bad breaking up now, two years in. What the fuck makes you think it will be easier four years in? You seem to think that moving to New York will be better for you both and that she'll build a life there for herself. You don't seem to realize that packing up and moving to a new city together is only going to keep building your life together. It is only going to dig your together hole even deeper. I understand why you want to wait. I do. Trust me. I was in her position at twenty years old. I understand that you think it'll be better for Kayla if you wait. But that is not true.

When my husband cheated on me, I did not have a job. He was paying rent, he was paying the bills, I was completely dependent on him. When I found out he cheated, yeah, it fucking hurt, and I wanted to fucking die. Trust me. t wanted to kill myself. But I got a fucking job, and I fucking saved up, and within a few months, I was gone. Have I ever once thought to myself, "Man, wish he'd waited two years before telling me"? No.

Everyone I know who has been cheated on or lied to or left by someone that didn't love them anymore—every single person would pick being told the truth over being lied to. You say she is your best friend—but you can't even be honest with her, and you never have been. Not fully. You say she is your best friend, but you're willing to lie and let her live thinking that you love her and want to spend the rest of your life with her, for what? You're afraid of hurting her feelings? Or are you just afraid of having to deal with the fallout of the scenario you created? No matter how it ends, you are going to hurt her feelings. You are going to have to deal with the very messy fallout from the scenario you created. Whether you do it now or in two years. No matter how it ends, you are going to hurt her.

I asked you the other day, "When was the last time you looked at her and thought, I want to be with this girl and this girl alone for the rest of my life?" You said never. I asked you if you thought she'd still be your friend after all this, if you waited two years, helped her get her life together, and then broke up after. I asked you that, wondering if you could think of a scenario in which she would remain your friend. But you couldn't, no matter what. This is going to destroy her, but it is going to be worse the longer you lie.

Why are you wasting more years of her life? She deserves to be with someone who loves her the way she needs to be loved. She deserves to be with someone that isn't lying and hasn't been tying the entire fucking time. She deserves to be with someone that doesn't think about other people during sex. She deserves to be with someone that doesn't wank it to somebody else's photos. She deserves to be with someone who wants a monogamous future with her. Every day you stay with her is a day wasted. Every day she remains your girlfriend is a day she could have been someone else's—someone else that might actually be working towards a future with her. She is a grown woman. Let her be part of the conversation.

She can keep her job with you. There are plenty of people that retain healthy work partnerships with their exes. But it's only going to happen if you are honest with her. Money is money. A job is a job. A city is a city. What I care about are the deep, permanent psychological scars you are going to leave her with should you continue to lie. I am not telling you to break up with her. If you did it now it would be completely out of left field, given how good you've been lying. What you need to do is, be honest. You need to tell her you love her as a friend but are falling out of love with her as a romantic partner.

This is an example of what I think you should say. Remember, this is coming from someone who knows what the fuck she is going through. I am telling you this for her, not me. Not for you, for her. This is what you should say:

"Kayla, you are my best friend, and I love you as my best friend, and I don't want to hurt you, but the longer I say nothing the worse it is going to be. There is a side of me I have not been honest with you about, and it's eating me alive. I am not, and never will be, monogamous. I have struggled with this my entire life, and I thought I'd be okay with the two of us together, but it has been eating away at me and I don't want to let this build. I don't want it to turn into more secrets and lies and resentment. I love you as my best fiend. But it has been a while since I have felt as though you were more than that. I have been trying, really trying to get back there, but it's not happening. I am not breaking up with you. I am not walking away from you. I love you, you are my best friend, and I do not want to lose you, but you deserve to know the truth. You deserve to know what's going on. You deserve to be part of the conversation. We're working towards moving to New York. I think it'll be better for both of us. But I want you to be working towards a life for yourself, separate from what we have together. I want New York to be yours, not ours. I am not leaving you, but you should plan for a future in which you leave me. I will never be able to love you the way you need to be loved, or give you the life you truly want and need and deserve. And I don't want to string you along and waste your time. I love the partnership we have, and I want to keep that forever, but as for a long-term monogamous relationship, if that is what you want, you should start locking for it somewhere else. I wish I had talked to you about this ages ago, but I didn't know how to. I didn't know what to say. I didn't want to hurt you. But I have realized, the longer I say nothing, the longer I wait, the worse it gets. I am so sorry. You deserve better than this. You deserve better than me. I am telling you how I really feel so you can figure out how you really feel. Because as is, you're in the dark. I don't want to keep you in there anymore."

Feel free to add, "I was going to wait until after we'd moved to New York and you finally had your own job and life and friends," but I get the feeling that would only make her feel worse. So imagine how bad it would be if you actually did that, staying with her because you pity her situation. Being left by someone sucks, but what cuts tar deeper is being lied to. You intend on spending the next two years working towards breaking up with her. Not only is that fucking stupid, it is fucking rude. You are essentially saying that she is nothing without you. Nothing. Do you think she is nothing without you? Do you think she is pathetic? And can't get by without you? She has friends. She has family. She has fucking agency. Worse case scenario: she wants to move back to Korea and can't afford it. You can, and helping her move back to Korea will be a lot cheaper than helping her move to New York first, selling your house in Richmond and buying another one, helping her set up her life, helping her get a job. What if a whole year in New York isn't enough? Two years in Richmond wasn't. What then? Are you going to help her move somewhere new? And help her set up a life there? Again? No matter what you do, in the end, you are going to hurt her.

So decide if you'd like to be honest with her now and have her be a part of the fucking conversation, or if you'd like to continue going down the road you've been going down that has brought you nothing but regret, resentment, and self-loathing. If you know you are going to break up with her in the end, at least start to ease her into it now. The longer you wait the worse it will be for her, and you. You're not just lying to her, you're lying to your parents, your family, your friends, your followers, and your viewers. Every day of your life, you are lying. And that is why you are so angry. That is why you are so stressed. All the time. You work and work and work to try and distract yourself from the problem. You seem to think working will somehow fix the problem.

When I thought you wanted to stay with her and maybe bang me on the side and commit to being a cheater, that was one thing. Now that I know you want to break up with her, and have wanted to for a long time, and are planning on waiting two years to do it. Frankly, in many ways, that is worse. The next two years of your life will be a lie. Any time the two of you are tagged in or post a cute photo or video, it will be a lie. Which will probably be fine at the time. But one day when you break up and she realizes that all that time was a lie, everything you said to her during those two years will become something she will never be able to hear from someone else, and believe. When she realizes that you didn't mean it when you told her you loved her, and that you didn't mean it when you talked about a future with her, and that you haven't been sexually satisfied in years … God forbid she finds out you think it's "cute" when she tries to be sexy in the bedroom. When she finds out about that, she will never trust again.

And no matter how good a life she will have in New York, it will be tainted by the memory of you, and the fake life you built. When she finds out that you stayed with her because you felt bad and were waiting for her to have her own life, that's not going to make her feel better. That's not going to make her appreciate you. It will make her feel worse and it will make her hate you. If you want to keep her in your life, tell her the truth. Ugly truths are always better than lies. Be honest with her. You've already made it up in your mind that you're not going to be with her. So from now until whenever you finally do it, you are a liar. And a cheater. And you're pathetic. Because you'd rather string her along for another two years than have a real fucking conversation with her. New York, a beautiful new beginning for her. Let it be. Talk to her now so by the time you move, you're on the same page and you can build the lives you need. Don't lie to her for two more fucking years. This is me talking as your friend. Don't do this to her. Tell her the fucking truth.

Naomi, in two video calls, informs Daniel she won't have sex with him because she doesn't want to cuckold Kayla.

April 1, Naomi and Daniel had a video call to discuss the terms and conditions in her eight-page letter.

In the call, Daniel agreed that, despite kissing, cuddling, and sleeping naked, he would not have sex with Naomi. This, Naomi explained, was because she "genuinely cares" about his "monogamous relationship" with Kayla, whom she had never met. Naomi had not yet disclosed that she was a sex worker, who was then in a lucrative monogamous arrangement with her sugar daddy, Kel. Daniel believed she was single.

April 11, they had another video call in which, Naomi later said, Daniel reconfirmed "no sex" so that he would remain faithful to Kayla.

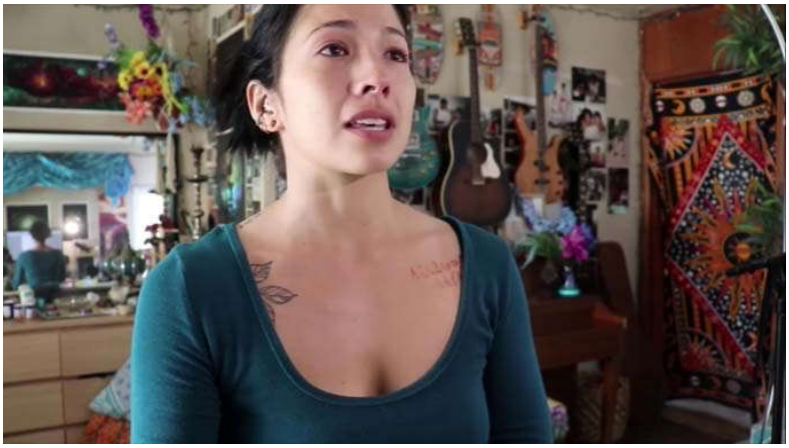
Naomi refuses sex during their affair because she doesn't want to cuckold her sugar daddy. He learns she is a sex worker.

April 20, Naomi flew to Las Vegas and spent two days with Daniel, all expenses paid. Naomi expected hugs and cuddles from her friend, but no sex. Daniel expected his friend to offer benefits like blowjobs or handjobs, but no sex. He would then, like Bill Clinton, be able to say, "I did not have sexual relations with that woman."

When Naomi refused blowjobs or handjobs, they both felt cheated. Then, in Daniel's bed, Naomi revealed that she was a sex worker, in an exclusive arrangement with a generous sugar daddy. Daniel then felt entitled to blowjobs or handjobs or sex, but she gave him nothing.

May 7, Naomi sent a private video to Daniel. Excerpt:

> Transcript: When you found out I was a sugar baby and I had someone else, suddenly another fire lit up under your ass and you wanted me again. I feel terrible for cheating on Kel. He treats me better than anyone I have ever been with. The worst part about this is that I didn't even want to do it. You were coming on so strong. I turned onto my stomach, face toward my pillow, trying to talk about it. First you started talking money. I said I could do that, expecting more of a conversation, but you took that as a cue to start making out with me.

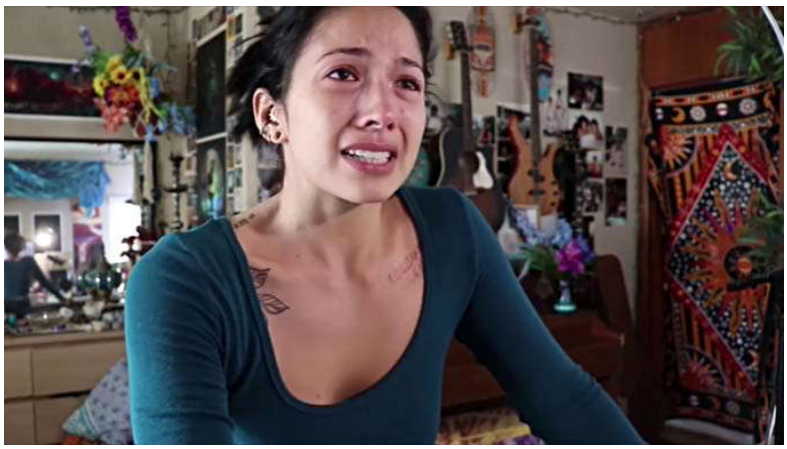


> I wanted to talk about it in the morning. You pushed for it at night. We'd agreed we were just friends that trip. You changed your fucking mind and didn't give me time to comprehend it. I was on 50 milligrams that night. You were on ten. I was half asleep. You were wide awake. I feel so fucking used. I didn't even want to. I wish I could take it all back. I wish I could take it all fucking back. It was not worth losing what we had. I wish I'd said no. I wish you'd never gone to Vegas. I feel so fucking guilty because of what I did to Kayla.

Naomi reveals their unconsummated affair to Daniel's fiancée by video message.

The same day, Naomi introduced herself in a private video to Kayla, whose email she found online, and took it upon herself to reveal to Kayla that Daniel had an unconsummated affair with her in Las Vegas. Excerpt:

Transcript: I didn't want it, I didn't enjoy it. I feel absolutely sick to my side. We had explicitly decided we were just friends. He changed his mind on the day he started making out with me before I'd even agreed to do anything. I just want you to know I am truly sorry. and you deserve better. I did to you what was done to me ten years ago and I fucking hate myself for it. I feel sick. It was one of the most painful things I've ever gone through, and I did it to you. The similarities between your situation now and where I was ten years ago is so fucking similar that it's scary.



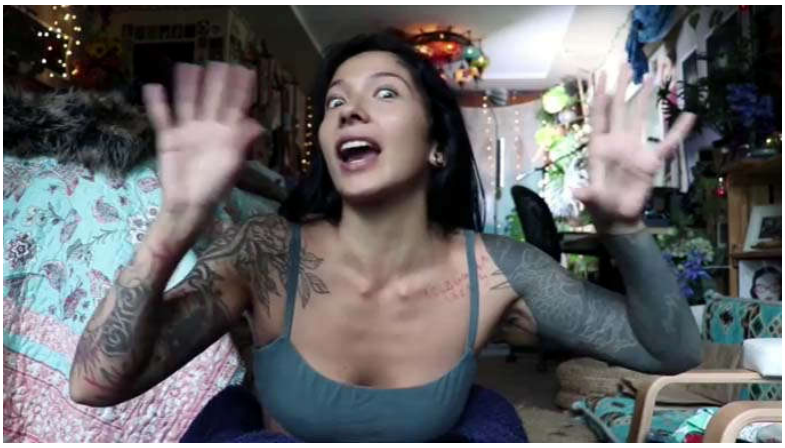
And yet I still fucking did it. And I haven't stopped crying. I feel absolutely sick to my stomach. I am so, so sorry. You deserve so much better than that. I did not enjoy it, he did not enjoy it and it kills me. I just want you to know I am truly sorry and you deserve better. I don't expect a reply, I expect I'll be blocked and I completely understand. But I never got an apology from the woman that actually fucked my husband and I don't want to be that. I hate myself.

After this invasion of their privacy Kayla and Daniel blocked Naomi on social media. Two years later, as part of their repudiation of Naomi's allegations, they made these parts of Naomi's two private videos public.

Naomi publishes on YouTube her allegation of sexual assault by an unnamed assailant in April in Las Vegas.

June 19, six weeks later, Naomi published allegations of sexual assault on YouTube without naming Daniel, titled "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent, and Assault." The video does not name Daniel:

Transcript: Hey guys, it is 8:00 in the morning and I touched up my roots yesterday. So I got splotch as a dye in my face but that's fine. I was just ruminating in the shower and I just wanted to have a little talk, a discussion. I was just going to do this on Instagram but I want to hear from like more people so I figured I would make an actual video and ask YouTube as well. I genuinely feel like manipulation and intent and all that should be included in the conversation of assault. For example, about two months ago I had a friend turn out to not be a friend because he did shit I didn't want. He coerced me, all that. He went home and then was like, "You renewed the worst of me," and then blocked me and hasn't spoken to me since. There was a part of me that was like, "That was assault." But there was another part of me that was like, "I didn't fucking fight back."



I was basically this man's therapist for three fucking years, and as I slowly unraveled his story and figured it out and kind of figured out why he does what he does, you know, it was all like a revelation to him and now he's in therapy, blah-blah-blah. I recently got in contact with somebody he assaulted seven years ago. [Madison] And as she and I have been talking, it has become blatantly clear that none of what I figured out was a revelation. This man has been doing the same things. He has been using the same excuses. He's been manipulating and lying and coercing for almost a decade.

So at that point it's like, OK, you know, looking into laws and stuff like that. Every law is explicitly like if you did something and then you regret it after, it's not assault. But they don't take into account how good so many predators are at lying and setting up the situations. I found this conversation with him that I had actually taken a photo of basically when I got back from Vegas, which is where he did it. We were still friends, but my mind was like, yeah, no, that was fucked up. You need to start, you know, capturing the proof because this man never said anything unless he was on, like, video chat or in person. But reading that conversation that I'd photographed, it was so clear that he knew exactly what to say. Nothing he said was incriminating.

Anyway, basically the point is, if I had been the only person, I would have been like, OK, that was fucked up, you piece of shit. Go to therapy. But it's, you know, discovering that it was all premeditated and it was all planned. And for three years it was just like manipulating and building up to this. And he's been doing it for seven years. It's kind of like at that point, 100% it is assault and then you look at other, you know, this happens quite a lot where I'm just gonna use men and women as an example. You can swap the genders and not all men, but I'm just gonna, you know.

You know there's a lot of men, not all, that will date and say things that basically make the person they're dating feel as though, OK, they are looking for long term. This is something that they're going for. Eventually they reach a point where they're like, OK, yep, I will sleep with this person. That woman is consenting to an intimate experience with someone she has trusted and is getting to know and wants to be with her in the long term, and has essentially made her feel that way emotionally. And then a lot of the times they'll fuck. And then the guy will be like, alright, peace. That's assault, you know.

And then you know, if, if the woman is like, well, OK, fuck, now I feel completely used. I feel completely violated, especially when it comes to the things of, you know, you thought you were going to have some kind of sex and then he did something that you didn't fucking want. But then the police are like, "But you consented to it. Now you're just regretting it afterwards."

What do you think? Obviously this would just open a can of worms for a whole bunch of other problems and you know, false reports and shit. But I genuinely believe that, like, intent and manipulation need to be a part of the conversation when it comes to consent, especially, you know, when you look into laws, it's like, what counts as sexual assault? Non-consensual penetration. You look into the laws in Nevada. In Vegas it is only assault if it was penetration; otherwise, you have to file under grossness and lewd behavior, but that's if you whipped out your dick in public. So you have to either be flat-out assaulted, and then there's, like, no middle ground. I'm fine, as fucked up as it was.

It did make my PTSD go through the roof. And that's another thing, obviously anyone watching this that's kind of been through some fucked up emotional manipulation that leaves you with PTSD as well. It's not just the physical assault that fucks people up, it's the emotional assault. And, like, so many people consent to things they didn't want. They just did it for the person who they were interested in. And they were like, this might go somewhere. And then if that person was a predator, chances are they did shit that you didn't really want, left you feeling kind of skeezy. You're like, you know, maybe this could be OK if they, like, apologize. And then they're like, right! And you're like, oh, OK, I feel like I was assaulted but I can't call it that. People are fucked up anyway. What are your thoughts on this matter?

So that's the conversation I want to have. I think that manipulation and long term, even short term, lying to get what you want needs to be a part of the conversation when it comes to consent. Because some people consent to things and then find out that it was not at all what they thought it was. Does that make sense?

So someone consenting to sleep with someone because they're dating and it's going somewhere and they feel safe and that's what it's going to be, that's what they consented to. If that person then has sex with them and is right, like if that person then has sex with them and it's like, all right, cool, that's all I wanted, you're an idiot for believing my lies. They didn't consent to that! And I'm not saying that's what happened to me, but like just an example. There's a lot of people who have been through this. So for anyone that has experienced this, what do you think? Obviously there are more extreme cases. For some it's like, yeah, that happened, but it wasn't so bad. For some it's like, yeah, no, I felt completely manipulated and lied to and assaulted.

And I, it's been following me and I can't describe why because people tell me it's not assault, you know? Oh, I'm running out of battery, so that's perfect timing. Let me know. What do you guys think? For three years he knew what he was doing. He knew what he was doing.

Daniel's lawyer sends a Cease and Desist Notice to Naomi to stop her allegations and to leave them alone.

This video, the previous two private videos, and the eight-page letter prompted Daniel to engage a defamation lawyer. On June 26, Daniel's lawyer sent Naomi this Cease and Desist notice, containing a cut-and-paste error calling Daniel a doctor that Naomi used to discredit it:

June 26, 2023

To Naomi King:

CEASE AND DESIST NOTICE OF INVASION OF PRIVACY
AND DEFAMATION ACTION AGAINST NAOMI KING

This law firm represents Daniel B. Greene in an action for libel, defamation, and invasion privacy including punitive damages, attorneys' fees, and costs to be commenced against you immediately. If you are represented by legal counsel, please direct this letter to your attorney immediately and have you attorney notify us of such representation.

This firm intends to immediately file suit against you in a defamation and invasion of privacy lawsuit arising from your statements about Daniel B. Greene and his partner in two videos you have sent to Mr. Greene and his partner appearing below:

[The first link led to Google drive to videos sent May 7, one to Kayla and the other to Daniel; the second link led to Google drive to the April 1 eight-page letter to Daniel; the third link led to YouTube to the June 19 video, "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent, and Assault".]

We are also in possession of direct communications between you and Mr. Greene indicating the falsity of your allegations. We intend to present these in the action against you and in our effort to remove you from your platforms. More specifically, the statements on these two videos are highly defamatory and subject you to a claim of libel per se and invasion of privacy. When proven at trial, you will be asked to pay compensatory damages, punitive damages, and attorneys' fees for these statements.

Please accept this letter as a formal demand to immediately retract these statement and cease and desist from further dissemination of this information on any platform, or email, or publication of this information in any form.

You are hereby directed to CEASE AND DESIST ALL DEFAMATION AND PUBLICATION OF ANY STATEMENT OF AND CONCERNING DANIEL B. GREENE.

Plaintiff, Daniel B. Greene, is a respected individual and medical professional [sic] in the community and has spent is life building a positive reputation. Nevertheless, we have been informed that you have been maliciously spreading inaccurate and unfounded information that is damaging to his personal and professional character, not to mention his personal safety. As well, the videos we have viewed are highly personal and invade the privacy of Daniel B. Greene and his partner.

Under the law, it is unlawful for an individual to make deliberate statements that intend to harm a person's reputation or invade that persons' privacy interests. It is demanded that you immediately do the following:

1. Destroy the videos identified above, and cease from publishing such statements on an social media platform including but not limited to Yelp, Google, and any other platforms upon which you may have posted, including TikTok, Facebook, Instagram, YouTube, WhatsApp, and Snapchat.

2. Retract any video identified above and other videos or electronic communications pertaining to Daniel B. Greene on all social media platforms including but not limited to Yelp and Google, as well as TikTok, Facebook, Instagram, YouTube, WhatsApp, and Snapchat.

3. Retract any picture pertaining to Daniel B. Greene on all social media platforms including but not limited to Google, Yelp, TikTok, Facebook, Instagram, WhatsApp, and Snapchat.

4. Retract any post pertaining to Daniel B. Greene on all social media platforms including but not limited to Yelp, Google, TikTok, Facebook, Instagram, WhatsApp, and Snapchat

5. Retract any communications/text messages pertaining to Daniel B. Greene.

6. Retract any and all comments posted by you pertaining to Daniel B. Greene on all social media platforms including but not limited to Yelp, Google, TikTok Facebook, Instagram, WhatsApp, and Snapchat.

7. Cease and Desist from attempting to contact Daniel B. Greene or his partner or any third party concerning Daniel B. Greene in any form including but not limited to text, email, phone, WhatsApp, Facebook messenger and LinkedIn.

8. You have shown in the past to demonstrate intent in the defamation and invasion of private of Daniel B. Greene. If this behavior occurs again, action will be taken against you to block you from all social media platforms. We will take action to removed your sites and prevent you from further posting. If we come to learn any third-party individual posts a video, picture, or comment on your behalf pertaining to Daniel B. Greene, now only will that individual be held liable but you will be held liable as well. In sum, we are demanding you cease and desist from defaming plaintiff Daniel B. Greene.

9. You will crease and desist from making further factually untrue and privacy-invading statements against Daniel B. Greene and take down any and all posts/reviews on all social media accounts including but not limited to Yelp, TikTok, YouTube, > Facebook, Google, Yelp, Instagram and/or Twitter. That includes an posts/reviews on all social media accounts including but not limited to TikTok, YouTube, Facebook, Google, Yelp, Instagram and/or Twitter related to Daniel B. Greene that you asked your family members, friends, colleagues, associates, and/or social media followers to write on your behalf in an attempt to tarnish Daniel B. Greene's reputation.

>
> If you do not comply with this cease-and-desist demand within 24 HOURS, Daniel B. Greene will have no choice but to move forward with this litigation against you. In addition, Daniel B. Greene will be entitled to seek monetary and equitable relief for your defamation.
>
> In the event that you fail to accept this demand, please be advised that Daniel B. Greene has asked us to communicate to you that he will pursue all available legal remedies, including seeking monetary damages, punitive relief, and an order that you pay court costs and attorneys' fees. Your liability and exposure under such legal action could be considerable.
>
> Before taking these steps, however, my client wished to give you one opportunity to discontinue you illegal conduct by complying with this demand. Accordingly, please remove the defamatory posts within 24 hours and provide written confirmation that you have done so.
>
> Sincerely, Mullen Law Firm, New York, Corinne M. Mullen, Esq., Attorney for Daniel B. Greene

Naomi replies falsely to Daniel's lawyer that her allegation is about a different man (in April in Las Vegas), not him.

June 27, within the 24 hours, Naomi replied:

> Hi Corinne, Thanks for reaching out. It's perfect timing, I was going to take down the [private] videos for him and his girlfriend the other day. That being said, I want you to know that they were Unlisted, meaning the only people that ever saw them, were them. I have also removed the letter. The last video was not about him. It was a general discussion. I talk about mental health and trauma and PTSD on my pages, and have even written books about it. My personal example was from an incident with someone else, after my experience with him. I go to Vegas often to get tattooed, he knows that. If he thinks that video is about him, it just says something about how he views his own behaviour. Let me know if there's anything else I can do for you, Thanks, Naomi PS. Can you please explain to me how he's a medical professional?

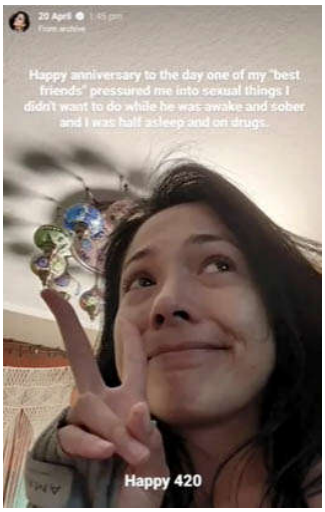
Naomi's letter lies by saying that her video wasn't about Daniel, but was a "general discussion" about "a different man." Naomi did not unpublish her public video, but she left Daniel and Kayla in peace for two years. She continued to live with her best friend, support herself through tattooing and sugar-babying, and promote herself on YouTube.

Naomi publishes nearly-nude music video "Fetish" on YouTube and Spotify:

In 2024 on March 15, Naomi publishes "Fetish" music video on YouTube, Spotify, and elsewhere. Previous songs on Spotify include: Grade-A Slut, Go Fuck Yourself, Feed Me Acid, and Shut the Fuck Up. Naomi has 300 monthly listeners on Spotify for an income of two dollars per month.

Naomi publishes sweet remembrance of sexual assault by an unnamed assailant.

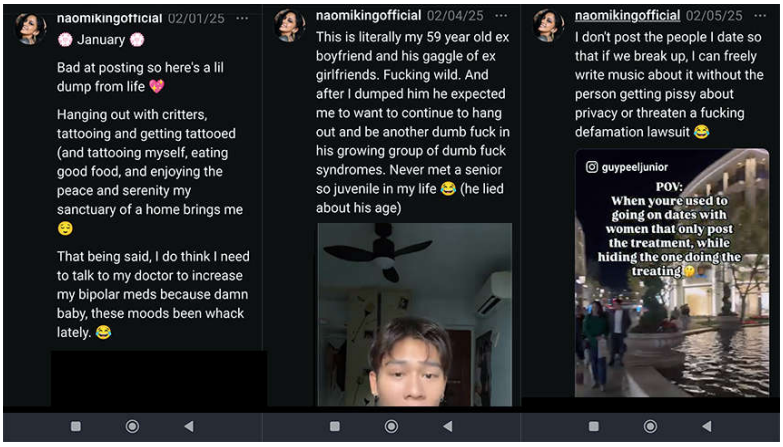
A month after publishing "Fetish," on April 20, Naomi sends her followers a sweet and innocent-looking reminder of the anniversary of her liaison with Daniel in Las Vegas.



Happy anniversary to the day one of my "best friends" pressured me into sexual things I didn't want to do while he was awake and sober and I was half asleep and on drugs.
Happy 420

Naomi speaks of her poorly-controlled mental illness and a recent 59-year-old "ex-boyfriend."

In 2025, from February 1 to 5, Naomi talked on Threads of her unstable moods, her bipolar disorder medication being insufficient, and her unsatisfactory 59-year old ex-"boyfriend."



naomikingofficial 02/01/25
January
Bad at posting so here's a lil dump from life
Hanging out with critters, tattooing and getting tattooed (and tattooing myself, eating good food, and enjoying the peace and serenity my sanctuary of a home brings me
That being said, I do think I need to talk to my doctor to increase my bipolar meds because damn baby, these moods been whack lately.
naomikingofficial 02/04/25
This is literally my 59 year old ex boyfriend and his gaggle of ex girlfriends. Fucking wild. And after I dumped him he expected me to want to continue to hang out and be another dumb fuck in his growing group of dumb fuck syndromes. Never met a senior so juvenile in my life (he lied about his age)
naomikingofficial 02/05/25
I don't post the people I date so that if we break up, I can freely write music about it without the person getting pissy about privacy or threaten a fucking defamation lawsuit
guypeeljunior
POV:
When youre used to going on dates with women that only post the treatment, while hiding the one doing the treating

Naomi launches public attack on YouTube against Daniel in a public 34-minute video, naming him as her assailant.

On February 12, Naomi resumed her attack in this YouTube video, titled, "I Received a Cease and Desist from Daniel Greene."

> Transcript: Two years ago, YouTuber Daniel Greene threatened to wipe me off of social media. So if I disappear, you'll know who did it.
>
> "If this behavior occurs again, action will be taken against you to block you from all social media platforms. We will take action to remove your site and prevent you from further posting."
>
> Let's talk about why. In June of 2023, I made a video and posted it here on YouTube. It was titled "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent and Assault." It was a general video on, you know, just a discussion of consent and assault and all that. In it, I gave a very brief and vague personal example. I said that I had a friend turn out to not be a friend and that he assaulted me, and I had been in contact with another person who said he assaulted her. Again, I did not identify who I was talking about. I did not say what this person's name was. I did not describe what they looked like. I did not describe where they lived, where they were from, what they did for work, Nothing.
>
> Eight days later, I received a Cease and Desist from Daniel Greene's lawyer, threatening me with a lawsuit, demanding I take that video down in 24 hours or they would sue me for slander and defamation. They would bury me under legal fees and wipe me off of social media. Again, I never said that that video was about Daniel, not once. I never identified who it was about.

I go to Vegas, often, to get tattooed. Daniel knows that. In fact, that was something that I said to his lawyer. I told his lawyer I go to Vegas often to get tattooed. Daniel knows that if he thinks that video's about him, that just says something about how he views his own behavior. So I did not take that video down. They gave me 24 hours or they would sue me. I never heard back from his lawyer despite the fact that I asked her a direct question. She called him a medical professional. As far as I know, I don't think he's a doctor. I'm assuming that was a typo or they forgot to remove it from the template.

I sent the Cease and Desist to someone, and she's read a lot of them in her life, and she said that this was one of the most aggressive Cease and Desists she had ever read in her life. She also said that if she hadn't known what this was about, she would have thought there was a Cease and Desist in regards to a bad review on Yelp for a doctor because they brought up Yelp, like, eight times. They didn't want me talking about him ever again. But, again, I never said that video was about him. They also accused me of harassment and invasion of privacy, which I'm not afraid to address. I have nothing to hide. After what he did to me in Vegas, I reached out to his partner because I needed her to know that what had happened I didn't want.

I know what it's like to move country for somebody and then find out that they're a lying, cheating piece of shit. I needed her to know that I didn't want it. I needed her to know that he was sober and wide awake—I'm fucking done crying about this shit—he was sober and wide awake and I was half asleep and on drugs, which he knew. I had arrived in Vegas in the morning and I spent April 20 just getting baked by the pool taking 40 milligram edibles all day. I went to sleep because his flight was going to land late in the evening and it would be about midnight before he would arrive.

I specifically asked him to bring coffee if he wanted to stay up and talk, I specifically asked him to bring coffee. He said no, let's just sleep, we'll hang out in the morning. He turned up at midnight, sober and awake, and pressured me, half asleep and on drugs, into sexual things that he and I had agreed beforehand would not happen. I repeatedly asked him if we could just sleep and talk in the morning. I was halfway through a sentence when he pushed me over and shoved his tongue in my mouth. He repeatedly tried to stick his penis in me, saying, "Come on, come on." I repeatedly pushed his penis away, saying "I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube," because I have medical conditions, one of which is idiopathic hypogonadotropic hypogonadism. It can make sex very painful for me. I cannot self lubricate or stretch, which he knows. He kept trying to shove it in me. I kept pushing his dick away just repeating, "I'm not having sex without lube, I'm not having sex without lube." Jerking off onto me, moaning about how long he dreamt about it. It was fucking disgusting, the shit he said. I was half asleep and on drugs. I didn't fucking want it. He'd told me he wanted to take me on a friendship trip. He'd told me he wanted to spoil me as a friend. We agreed beforehand we were just friends. He turned up at midnight and immediately went against his word. I didn't have time to fucking think.

I reached out to his girlfriend because I felt like shit and I know what it's like to be cheated on and it fucking sucks. She replied and asked me for the truth. She asked me for the truth. [Kayla disproved this later, in her video] I was at the airport when I received her message. I headed home to send her the truth. By the time I got home, she had asked me to leave her alone, which I completely understood, so I respected that and I left her alone. A handful of days later, she reached out to me again to call me a vile, despicable human being. It was that message that made it very clear to me that she had been asking him for the truth and he was still lying.

There's no way in fucking hell you do that to me and then use me as a fucking scapegoat. Jesus Christ. Fucking disgusting. So, because she had once asked me for the truth and made it blatantly clear she had been asking him for it, and that he was still lying, I sent her eight pages that I had written because this is how I fucking deal with shit. If I have something to say with somebody, I write it down and I make them listen. This was written and read to Daniel weeks before all of this. Eight pages. One-and-a-half pages of this was me calling him out for the way he had been treating me for three years, and 6-1/2 pages was me calling him out for his behavior in relationships and all the shit that he had been saying and doing behind his partner's back for two years. [And yet she went to I had proof that I'd fucking fought for her. I had proof that I'd fought for their relationship. I begged him to fucking talk to her for two fucking years, only to have him lie to get me alone, pressure me into sexual things that he agreed wouldn't happen, and then go home and use me as a scapegoat. She wanted the truth. He was still lying. He said she deserved to know everything. OK, he said she deserved to know everything. And by golly did I agree.

In fact, I had eight pages of proof that I had been telling him that for two fucking years. So I sent it to her. If he had truly told her everything, this shouldn't have made a fucking difference. But it looks like it did. And in case he is denying having ever heard this, here is the exact date and time I told him about it [March 29, 2023-03], the exact date and time I followed up about it, and the exact date and time we had that call [April 1, 2023]. He thanked me for this [letter]. He thanked me on call, which I obviously don't have proof of. I unfortunately did not record our conversations. But ten days later, completely of his own accord, he reached out to me again to thank me again for this very real wake up call. OK? I have proof that he heard this and that he thanked me for it. I have proof he said she deserved to know the truth and I have proof that she asked me for the truth.

Seven weeks after that happened, I made my video "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent and Assault. I did not think he was keeping tabs on me. At the time I received the Cease and Desist, I was already going through something. I was already dealing with some trauma. Oh, and by the way, he knew that I already had PTSD from previous trauma. I was already going through some shit. But this made it so much worse, finding out that someone who hurt you is keeping tabs on you and watching you even though they blocked you. I kept that video fucking vague and I did it on purpose because I didn't want to start shit. I never said it was about him and I'm not saying that it is. What I am saying is that he said it was about him and that he threatened to sue me if I didn't take it down within 24 hours.

But I left it up, and it's been up for almost two years. I know people are going to ask me why I didn't say something earlier. I wasn't ready. I mean fuck! I thought it was ready, but I—Jesus Christ—I guess not. But I have to do this. I have stayed silent for almost two years and that silence has not been good for my mental health. I don't think I will ever truly know peace if I allow him to silence me.

And in case you're wondering if there have been any [other] allegations against Daniel, there was. He told me. That's the only reason I know about it. He told me it was false and that there's no way it could be true because he wasn't there at the time. Turns out he told Discord something different. He told Discord he was there, but he was only there to visit his father.

I'm not saying that "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent And Assault" is about Daniel. I never did. I go to Vegas often to get tattooed. My Mambabatok [Filipino tattooist] lives there, my spirit dad, I have to say something. I want to fucking breathe again? Holy fucking Jesus, this. I thought it was done crying about this. If he did the things that I mentioned in that video, then that would mean it's a pattern. And if I woke up one day and saw another allegation somewhere, I would never forgive myself for saying nothing.

Because Daniel likes to take his friends "travelling". I wonder if they'll sue me over this. I'm not saying that other video is about him. I never did. This one's about him. And all I'm doing is sharing the Cease and Desist. All I'm doing is sharing the fact that he was keeping tabs on me even weeks after our friendship ended. And that he watched my video. And that he said it was about him even though I never did. And that he went to a law firm and told them it was about him. And that he sent a lawyer after me to bark like a fucking dog and threaten me into silence. He threatened to sue me. He threatened to bury me under legal fees. He threatened to wipe me off of social media if I didn't take that video down in 24 hours.

After I got this, anytime I got an e-mail—it's going to happen again, I guarantee you—any time I saw that little notification on my phone, my stomach would fucking drop because I was fucking terrified it was his lawyer again, coming after me to threaten me for something else. I spent a good year of my life looking over my shoulder wondering what I could or couldn't say. Because apparently if I talked about my life and the things that I have been through, even though you know, even if I never say who the fuck it was, apparently he was going to come after me for it. Sorry, not apparently, confirmed. That's going to happen again if I post this, but I want to feel OK again and I don't think I ever will if I let him silence me.

I will not let him silence me and I will not let him bury this the way he likes things to get buried. I think his followers deserve to know what kind of a man he is because, as his own lawyer said, he's done a good job building a positive reputation as a medical professional. The kind of man he is, when the cameras are not rolling, he's a liar and a cheater. He is a vile, despicable human being and those words come straight from the mouth of his own partner. I don't know if they're still together. I'm not looking him up. I never want to see his face again.

The first thing I did when our friendship ended, I went to YouTube. I clicked on an icon of his video and I hit Do Not Recommend Channel because I never wanted to see his face again. But it turns out he was keeping tabs on me. Daniel is a vile, despicable human being and the kind of man who would pressure one of his own best friends into sexual things while he's sober and awake, knowing very well that they are half asleep and on drugs. He is the kind of man to keep tabs on them, watch their videos, and hire a lawyer to try and threaten them into silence. He is the kind of man that would threaten a lawsuit, legal fees, and social media eradication over a video in which I never identified who I was talking about. That's the kind of man he is.

I am done being silent. I don't know what's going to happen. If I disappear, you'll know who did it. I don't fucking know. Maybe I'll receive another Cease and Desist. I wonder if he'll go with the same lawyer. She called him a medical professional. This was the revised version. It was titled revised Cease and Desist, but they threatened defamation on a video that never said it was about him and they called him a medical professional and she accidentally sent me a blank e-mail half an hour before the real one. So he might go with someone new.

I spent April 20, 2023 alone in Vegas by the pool, April 20, 2024 with this:

[Naomi presents her 2024 message to her followers: "Happy anniversary to the day that one of my best friends pressured me into sexual things I didn't want to do while he was awake and sober and I was half-asleep and on drugs."

And I'm not having that this year. I am done being silent. I don't know what this is going to do. I don't need this to blow up. I don't want this to blow up. I just fucking can't stay silent, and there's no reason why this story needs to end with him getting away with it, not when he went out of his way to attach his own name to my video. . I never said it was about him. And I'm not saying that it is. What I am saying is that he threatened to sue me over it, so if I disappear, you'll know who did it. I will not let him silence me. I will not let him bury me.

[In the video, Naomi presents all four pages of the Cease and Desist Letter]

Let's talk about day number two. I'm just going to force myself to talk through the tears because otherwise it's just going to take too long, so forgive me, OK? On day number two we went for breakfast, and over breakfast we discussed the fact that it never should have happened and that we were just friends and that it was never going to happen again. We had that conversation over breakfast. After breakfast, on the way back, he stopped by an ATM and I told him I didn't want his money because he said he wanted to spoil me as a friend and he said, "No, no, no, I promise you, I promise you, just friends. It never should have happened, never happening again. Just friends. I told you I wanted to spoil you."

Right? This was a last minute tattoo appointment. It was last minute. My Mambabatok said I have a cancellation for tomorrow, do you want a spot? And I said Oh my God, yes, I'll ask my friend. But to be honest, his opinion doesn't matter. I want to get fucking tattooed. So the appointment was at 4:00. We got back to the hotel, I went to the pool. He stayed in the hotel room for hours. I stayed by the pool eating edibles. Eventually he came out. We hung out there for a little bit and then I had to go to my appointment and he was going to come with me.

So we went back to the hotel room and as soon as we were alone again, guess who went back against his word? As soon as we were alone again, he started pressuring me all over again. And I said repeatedly, we just talked about this over breakfast. We just talked about this. We just said we're just friends, never happening again, shouldn't have happened. And he kept saying, "Oh, what's the difference? We already did it once. We already did it once. What's the difference?" I had a fucking tattoo appointment. I needed somewhere to fucking pee. Both times he jerked himself off onto me. Except the second time it was worse because he also shoved his dick in my mouth. I remember my mouth was so fucking dry from the edibles. Felt like a fucking carpet, and it was all so fast. He came all over my batok, which is sacred and was given to me for sexual healing because of things that I have been through in my past, and he knows that.

And then I went to my tattoo appointment. So he cannot say that he made a mistake and it was a one time thing. He did it twice. Both times I repeatedly tried to talk him out of it and both times he jerked himself off onto me. Both times he said horrific things while doing it. And then I went and I got tattooed and it was really painful and I went into shock and I was bandaged up. I feel like it might have saved me because he didn't touch me after that.

[Five minutes of hysterical crying]

I forgot to mention that I did report this to the Las Vegas police. [There is no report, and she never said this again.]

Daniel hires Mike Paul, of Reputation Doctor, LLC, as litigation public relations crisis manager.

On February 13, Daniel, instead of hiring a lawyer, hired Mike Paul, owner of Reputation Doctor, LLC, as his litigation public relations crisis manager, to assist him to manage his response in the court of public opinion to Naomi's allegations.

Daniel publishes a preliminary rebuttal that their affair was consensual.

The same day, February 13, Daniel published a rebuttal in his titled, "In Response To Naomi King's Allegations."

> Transcript: Hello, my name is Daniel Greene. This is an important message in response to various false allegations made against me by Naomi King of alleged sexual assault in a campaign launched on YouTube and more. Let me be clear, I had consensual sex with Naomi King. Yes, it was an affair, that my then girlfriend and now fiancée took several years to move on from. I also have clear and convincing evidence to prove everything was consensual. Myself and my team are now planning to sue Naomi King in a court of law.

The communication Naomi King has inaccurately used against me online has greatly damaged me and others, to date. I also have many other pieces of evidence which prove my innocence. Look for more communication from me based on truth and fact in the near future. Naomi King took time to launch a campaign against me and I will need time to communicate my truth as well. More soon. Thank you.

Naomi escalates her attack in a 20-minute video that violated YouTube's terms of service, so it was taken down.

February 17, Naomi escalated her allegations in “Daniel Greene Part Two.”

Transcript: Hello, my name is Naomi King and this is an important announcement. Was that it? I don't know, I didn't watch it. My friend gave me the lowdown. Hey guys. I really, really, really want to say thank you to everybody that has been so supportive. It's been really overwhelming and it's kind of freaking me out. There has been a lot of confusion surrounding timelines and dates. People think that the eight page letter was written after the trip even though I stated it was written weeks before the trip. So in this video, I want to kind of reiterate and make clear what the timeline actually was and what the dates actually were. There were dates in the screenshots, but they're small so I feel like people miss them. So I want to make things very clear.

I am not denying having history with Daniel in the past. He first slid into my messages over Black Lives Matter. OK, here's some dates. January 22, 2023 was when he said he wanted to take me on a friend trip and spoil me and we started talking about travel around then.

For all the people who are confused as to what the fuck “spoil” even means, I'm a sugar baby. He and I were not daddy–baby. He wanted to spoil me as a friend. Like, that was explicit there. I know some people are not going to understand that. Some people are going to be like, like I know, me sharing this information makes me look bad. We discussed hanging out. He wanted to fucking pay for the entire trip and give me money. I want it to get fucking tattooed. It was kind of a win-win. People are going to fucking hate me for this and I know that, but you know, it is what it is. I'm getting sued anyway.

I don't remember when we officially, like, planned and booked things, but the trip was going to be for the end of April. On March 28th, I wrote the eight page letter. This is weeks before the trip. I told him about it on March 28th. On March 29th, I was like, hey, I want to say it sooner rather than later because it's kind of heavy. And then on April 1, we had the video call where I read the entire thing out to him and it took about forty minutes. We decided during that call 100% nothing was going to happen between us. This was one hell of a fucking wake up call and made him sign up for fucking therapy again. We made that decision: friends. We're not doing that to her [Kayla].

April 11th he messaged again to thank me again for that literal wake up call. April 20th I fly to Vegas. This wasn't the first time the two of us hung out. He came here and visited me in Vancouver for like three days in 2022. Nothing happened because we were just friends. That being said, I do live with my best friend so he and I were never truly alone together. So now I am here to answer the questions. What were you wearing? I went to sleep first alone and I was buck-ass naked because I always sleep naked. I've done it since I was a teenager. I cannot stand the feeling of clothes bunching around my skin and twisting as I sleep and inseams and it's just bad. But when Daniel got there I put this [jumper] on.

This was how I let him in, very groggy. I remember one of the first things he said upon seeing me was he commented on how high I looked. So I said, "You want to catch up?" He took half a bite of one, which would have been 10 milligrams, but that takes about an hour to kick in. So when he did what he did, he was still sober. I went back to sleep and I did remove this [jumper] because I was now under the blankets. Before I removed this, that first night, I straight-up asked Daniel if he would prefer it if I left it on. I was like, "Hey, I can leave this on while I sleep." He was the one that was like, "No, no, I've shared beds with friends before. Like, it's not weird." He said that my actions are my responsibility. He's straight up told me, like, "You be comfortable."

Looking back on it? Dumbass—I know that, know that. He went and took a shower because airplanes are disgusting, and when he was done he joined me in bed. I would like to let people know that I have slept in beds with many of my friends traveling, sharing the same bed. I sleep naked next to women, next to men, next to all the lovely people in between. And none of my friends have ever taken advantage of that. People off the top of my head who I've travelled with and slept naked next to, who did not take advantage of me? Kurt, Scott, Cody, Kimmy, Tay, Romeo. Someone being next to you is not consent. I guess I should reenact for you what happened. All right, y'all:

Here's what happened. There were blankets. There were pillows. Not this many. I was in bed like this when he came and joined me. He lay here and I was very groggy and half asleep and he started to pressure me into things because I was facing him. I was like not good. So I turned onto my stomach and put my arm between us to create a barrier and I was looking at my pillow while trying to talk him out of it. Like, I went from facing him and talking to him, to creating a physical barrier between us because he was coming on really fucking strong. He promised me beforehand that he wanted to just be friends. He promised me he wanted to spoil me as a friend, which obviously looking back on now I was a fucking idiot for believing that. I was half asleep. Like I had the strength to get up, make a couple jokes, and then get back in bed. But I was not fully there, so he was pressuring me.

[Excerpt from Naomi's May 7, 2023 private video to Daniel]

The worst part about this is that I didn't even want to do it. You were coming on so strong. I turned onto my stomach, face toward my pillow, trying to talk about it. First you started talking money. I said I could do that, expecting more of a conversation, but you took that as a cue to start making out with me.

So I was lying here like this, and then when I was halfway through what I was trying to say, he pushed me over and started putting his tongue in my mouth. Now, I will acknowledge that I did not fight him off. I will acknowledge that I froze because that is my trauma response. It was all very quick. I really did not have time to think. And then he worked his way down my body in a way in which I can describe only felt like someone going down the checklist of everything they had ever dreamt of doing to you, very quickly. Push over, shove tongue and mouth, suck the titties, lick the pussy, lick the asshole. Like he literally was just like bam-bam-bam. And then he tried to stick it in me and it was at that point that I was just like, “I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube.” And he kept positioning himself between my legs saying come on, can we just try just the tip, just the tip, just the tip. And I kept pushing him away saying I'm not having sex without lube, I'm not having sex without lube. So he jerked himself off onto me, repeatedly moaning my name and how long he dreamt about it. It all happened very quickly. I've seen comments from some people saying what the fuck, it takes time to jerk yourself off. Not for him it doesn't.

I am going to reenact what he did and how he moaned from both incidents:

Night one, he moaned on loop while jerking himself off. “On Naomi, you have no idea how long I thought about this.” That's what he moaned on repeat on night one. He came all over my batok. He went into the bathroom and stayed there. I yelled at him to bring me a towel. I wiped his cum off of my stomach, threw the towel on the ground, and passed out. The following morning, Daniel informed me that he spent the entire night crying and puking, and he swore that it would never happen again. And that's part of why I believed that he wouldn't do it again. Because when someone admits to crying and puking after doing something like that to you, and they promise they're not going to do it again, you kind of think they won't do it again..

Day two, after the pool, we went back to the hotel room so we could get our shit, my shit. Because not only did I have to, like, change and stuff, but for batok ceremonies, you need, like, an offering. And I needed to go get my food and stuff that I had there. And then he started pressuring me into the shit that he promised wouldn't happen. And I repeatedly told him, “Daniel, we just talked about this. We said we weren't going to do this. We just talked about this over breakfast. You promised me we were just friends.” He kept pressuring me. He kept pressuring me. I had somewhere to fucking be, so, as per usual, I did not fight back, and I will acknowledge that he did push me to my knees and shove his dick in my mouth saying, “Suck my cock.”

That time he also made me lie down on the bed while he laid the money that he took out of the ATM that he promised would be just for being friends—on my body. And, I will acknowledge, I did not fight him off. But I did repeatedly try to talk him out of it, and whenever he pushed for sex I did reject that. And, oh my God, the shit he moaned. The second time when he was jerking himself off staring at me like I was a fucking porno magazine, he said this on loop until he came: “I think about this every time I fuck my own girlfriend.” It's really disgusting and really mean. But he said that on loop until he came all over my sacred tattoo. So yeah, I tried to talk him out of it, but I did not use the word no, and I did not use the word stop.

I knew that his flight was the next day, during the day. I knew that I was going to get one more night alone. There was a third day and everyone's going to be like, “Hey, why didn’t you run away?” , where the fuck was I gonna sleep? Where the fuck was I gonna stay? We went to an art exhibit place, Area 15, that crazy place. Just went there and hung out.

In his reply video to mine he explicitly said that we had consensual sex, which is interesting because in his message here he says we didn't have sex: “I don’t agree with that but I understand. We didn’t have sex but that’s not really the point with the line. So you’re not wrong. But that’s why I didn’t want to cross that specific line. Again, I understand if you hate me.” So we now officially have on record him saying that we had sex, but I have record here him saying that we didn't have sex.

In his April 28th message, he blamed his demons and the voices in his head for his behavior: “I’m trying to fix myself. I’m trying to not be the person the voices in my head tell me I am. A part of that is stopping with the lies. The guilt made me suicidal. I almost got put in an institution by the first shrink I saw when I got back, like my mom. As a result, I told Kayla everything. What we did, what I said, the money I gave you, everything. She deserved to know and amazingly has stuck with me. But the hurt I saw in her is my biggest regret in life and I’ve realized so fucking much since I got back about why I am so fucked up and unhealthy toward sex and relationships. There are two people in me and I want to be the good one. I am so sorry I hurt you as well. I didn’t want to hurt anyone and my god you didn't deserve this but I don't want to blame trauma or any excuse. I fucked up. I started acting like the voices in my head tell me I am. I can't just say it's because of what happened to me. No excuses. I wouldn't never stop behaving this way if I wasn't finally honest, not only about what happened between us, but how horribly miserable I've been for my adult life. I hope you understand but we shouldn't talk. I genuinely wish you the best future possible but we are not good for each other and what I am responsible for happening is something I will be trying to fix for years." And then blocked me.

On May 1st, I made two videos because my whiny ass does this. This is from the video that I sent to Kayla on May 7th:

[Excerpt from Naomi's May 7, 2023 private video to Kayla]

I didn't want it, I didn't enjoy it. I feel absolutely sick to my side. We had explicitly decided we were just friends. He changed his mind on the day he started making out with me before I'd even agreed to do anything. I just want you to know I am truly sorry and you deserve better.

I know she watched that video because that's the one she responded to when she asked me for the truth. At that same time, I made a video for Daniel because I was in a state of shock and I was very confused and I felt very used and objectified and fetishized and taken advantage of and violated. But I was also devastated and in the state of hating myself for letting it happen, because that's the kind of guilt that we live with.

Here's a couple clips from the video I sent to Daniel:

[Excerpt from Naomi's May 7, 2023 private video to Daniel]

I wanted to talk about it in the morning. You pushed for it at night. We'd agreed we were just friends that trip. You changed your fucking mind and didn't give me time to comprehend it. I was on 50 milligrams that night. You were on ten. I was half asleep. You were wide awake. I feel so fucking used. I didn't even want to.

On May 15th, my friend sent her a link to that letter and then that was that. Over a month later, on June 19th, I posted my video, "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent And Assault." It was about manipulation, consent and assault. Some people for are getting, like mad about that. Like the description's in the title in that video, one of the things that I said was that I was basically this man's therapist for three fucking years. And as I slowly unraveled his story and figured it out and kind of figured out why he does what he does, you know, it was all like a revelation to him and now he's in therapy, blah-blah-blah. I recently got in contact with somebody he assaulted seven years ago, and as she and I have been talking, it has become blatantly clear that none of what I figured out was a revelation.

This man has been doing the same things. He has been using the same excuses. He's been manipulating and lying and coercing for almost a decade. If I had been the only person, I would have been like, OK, I fucked up, you piece of shit, go to therapy. But it's, you know, discovering that it was all premeditated and it was all planned. And for three years, it was just like manipulating and building up to this. And he's been doing it for seven years. I said that, you know, I had spoken to someone that had allegedly been assaulted by this person that I never named, and talking to her was horrific. Talking to her made me see a lot of things very clearly. Eight days later, I received the most aggressive Cease and Desist, with many errors, over my video that never identified who it was about. I replied that day because they gave me a 24 our response, which was not enough time for me to get my own lawyer. I knew that coming forward would potentially ruin me, get me sued.

Daniel didn't mention the second allegation [from Madison] in his little monotonous read. She said, "Daniel Greene is a rapist, he raped me in the summer of 2016, he is a YouTuber now with hundreds of thousands of followers. Please do not follow him, he uses social justice issues for his own gain as a white straight man. He did many things to me without my consent, and then he raped me and left me to leave his fathers house, bleeding. Fuck you, Daniel, fuck you, fuck you, fuck you. Feel free to reblog. Honestly, I don't care anymore, I cant handle holding it in." He's still trying to sweep that one under the rug.

So he is going to focus all of his energy on trying to ruin me as much as he can on his way out. And he's going to be able to. I will acknowledge that I did not fight him off, and I did continue to hang out with him afterwards, because I was in a state of shock, and I fawn, which I hate. I feel like I had to say something genuinely. I don't want anyone else getting hurt and I am willing to be publicly crucified for it. He can afford the best lawyers. Somebody informed me he hired a global crisis PR manager. Like, I'm going to end up bankrupt, I'm telling you right now.

Naomi solicits donations for her upcoming legal defence, "charity", or "more therapy," depending on her future needs.

The same day, she solicited money from her followers, but not by using GoFundMe, which is transparent to donors, but PayPal, which is not::

Hey guys, I just wanted to do a quick update because I was given the heads-up about his video. I'm not watching it, but I have been given the gist. Ever since then I've had a couple people reach out and say that if he sues they would love to pitch in and help me fight it, which is very kind. So if you would like to send any donations you can send donations to PayPal, the PayPal email if medical man green wants to sue me at gmail.com. There'll be more updates, but in the meantime I guess I need to prepare myself.

If you would like to pitch in, medicalmangreenwantstosueme@gmail.com is where you can donate via PayPal. Thank you so much for the support. I genuinely was not expecting it. I genuinely thought that there was going to be a lot more hate. If he sues me, obviously I will need to use the money for that. If he doesn't, I will donate to charity in Vancouver and possibly get myself some more therapy. Thank you so much. Thank you so much for the love and support. Um, this is terrifying but … you know.

Naomi publishes an apology to Daniel, Kayla, and sexual assault survivors.

The same day, Naomi apologized in "I Am So Sorry. Oh My God." Her 2023 eight-page letter to Daniel was appended:

> Transcript: This is the fifth time I have tried recording an apology video. I am so sorry to every survivor that I have hurt in doing this. That was not my intent, and it breaks my heart how many people I have hurt. I have been reading your comments and I am devastated by what I have done. This is not normal behaviour. This is not OK, And I'm checking myself. Part 2 was taken down by YouTube; it got flagged for sexual content. I'm not the one who took it down. I'm not trying to hide things, I'm not trying to pretend it didn't happen, and I already know that a bunch of you have downloaded it, so I'm not trying to hide.
>
> I am so sorry to every survivor that I have hurt in this. I am also, you know, horrifically sorry. I want to apologize to Kayla so much, and Daniel, I am devastated by how many people I have hurt. I never said that I said no. I never said that I fought him off. I never said that I said stop. I never said that he raped me. And now I have hurt thousands of people. I have become that person that has set survivors back, and that revolts me and I hate it. To every sexual assault survivor who watched my first video, and felt something, and related, and then watched Part 2 and felt completely betrayed, that also breaks my heart. Everyone's, you know, experience of, of trauma is different, and I know that for so many people I let you down. I'm not OK with that, and I hurt so many people. It was not my intent. I genuinely thought I was doing something good. I thought I was protecting people. But clearly I was not. I am not OK with my behavior. It's gross. I agree with your comments, and I am going to step back and reflect.

> I don't like this version of me. So I'm going to put an end to this. I'm going to acknowledge my faults. You know, I stand by my trauma, but I do not stand by my behavior. I am so sorry. I apologize. I genuinely don't know what I was thinking. I don't want to blame mental illness. I don't like this behavior and I'm going to make it stop. And I am so sorry for all of the hurt that I have caused. I thought I was doing the right thing. Clearly I was wrong and I am deeply ashamed of how I have been behaving.

Daniel and Kayla publish a detailed 21-minute rebuttal, revealing Naomi to be a sex worker for the first time.

The same day, Daniel and Kayla delivered their point-by-point rebuttal, "Proving Naomi King Lied With Their Own Words," which gathered 440,000 views and 7,600 comments.

Transcript: Hello, my name is Daniel Greene, and this is in response to Naomi King's recent videos accusing me falsely of sexual assault on a trip to Las Vegas. And it's very important to me that I immediately address how the title of this video is not clickbait. And Naomi King, in her own second video recently included evidence to prove the title of this video.

One, there was a screenshot of a text sent where Naomi King states that she were asking for us to go further on the second day of the trip. And on top of that, she included snippets from a video apologizing to Kayla. And there was another one to myself where she removed context where Naomi King explicitly states that the relationship ship was consensual:

Naomi: I wish I could take it all back. I wish I could take it all fucking back. It was not worth losing what we had. I wish I'd said no. I wish you'd never gone to Vegas. I feel so fucking guilty because of what I did to Kayla.

And even in her video she shows the empty drive links that our lawyer had used and since erased for memory purposes. And that leads me to believe Naomi King thought we would no longer have copies of those videos—which is not the case. We do. And this also allows me to counter Naomi King's claim in her first video that I was unprovoked, keeping tabs on her after our affair ended, which is not the case. In the days and weeks following us blocking Naomi King on several platforms, we continued to receive messages not only from Naomi King, but one of her friends. And also to make the claim that I could not know this video was about me, I find to be absurd. It includes details about a trip to Las Vegas. And Naomi King also mentions contacting a stalker of mine that I had told her about in confidence during our three-year relationship.

Once I realized Naomi King had contacted my stalker, Madison, that is when I decided to seek legal counsel. Naomi included clips in her recent video, posted Saturday, to make it seem even in these private videos she was claiming assault, which is not the case. I am going to play you clips from those personalized videos that Naomi King sent to Kayla and I, and show you her directly contradicting the accusations she made against me and directly talk about how what happened was consensual. I will then show you how in her 2023 video that drove me to hire legal counsel, you can see Naomi King deciding to change consensual to nonconsensual. This video will clearly show a pattern of escalation and dishonesty from Naomi King, and it'll start now:

Naomi: He turned up at midnight sober and awake and pressured me, half asleep and on drugs, into sexual things that he and I had agreed beforehand would not happen. I was on 50 milligrams that night. You were on ten.

Naomi is contradicting herself saying I was on zero, then ten. In this lunchtime screenshot she's messaging me about taking 40:

Daniel: I'm going to try and sleep on the plane so I have night energy.

Naomi: Ate 40 mg. Gonna go to the pool now.

Daniel: Holy fuck, how high are you going to be"

Naomi: A good amount! 50 mg is funtime in space. 40 mg is funtime on earth.

I had no knowledge Naomi was continuing to take edibles. That contradicts what happened when I arrived. She walked down to the lobby in a bathrobe, greeted me, and walked me upstairs sober as a whistle.

Naomi: I reached out to his girlfriend because I felt like shit and I know what it's like to be cheated on, and it fucking sucks. Kayla replied and asked for the truth. On May 7 she asked me for the truth:

Kayla: Naomi, for two years what exactly went on behind my back between you two? I would like to at least hear your words, too.

Naomi: I was at the airport when I received her message. I headed home to send her the truth. By the time I got home, she had asked me to leave her alone, which I completely understood. I respected that and left her alone. A few days later, on May 12 she reached out again to call me a vile, despicable human being:

Kayla: I feel like I finally know the full truth. You are both vile, despicable human beings to do this to another person, over years. I'm revolted by the mere sight of you

It was that message that made it very clear to me that she had been asking him for the truth, and he was still lying.

Kayla: Naomi King said in her video that I reached out to her and wanted to know the truth. That is misleading. On May 7, she sent me a video, unprompted, wanting to apologize for what had happened:

Naomi: Hi, before you block me on here, I wanted to tell you how sorry I am Truly. Please watch this. I need you to know, and see, and hear how sorry I am. I know there's nothing I can say to make it better, but I can't not say something. I am so, so sorry.

Kayla: When I first saw the message, I did not want to respond right away, but I did say I would like to hear her side because I felt that was right. When I watched the video, I deleted that message.

Kayla: I understand you feeling guilty and wanting to say something, but, please, just let me grieve in peace. I am trying to hold on to whatever pieces of my life I have left, and right now this just sends me into a world of hurt. I want it to stop. I want to be left alone.

Kayla: Now, you might have noticed that my second response was never actually shown in either of her videos, and that is because it says this here there is no mention of sexual assault. That is because there was absolutely none in the video I received. As a survivor of sexual assault myself, I take that very seriously and had that been there, I would have had a very, very different response and conversation. In the video Naomi uploaded on Saturday, there are two snippets from that apology video. I think it would be best to show everyone the full context, so I will play the rest of it in full now:

Naomi: I did to you what was done to me ten years ago and I fucking hate myself for it. I feel sick. It was one of the most painful things I've ever gone through, and I did it to you. This similarities between your situation now and where I was ten years ago is so fucking similar that it's scary. And yet I still fucking did it. And I haven't stopped crying. I feel absolutely sick to my stomach. I am so, so sorry. You deserve so much better than that. I did not enjoy it, he did not enjoy it and it kills me. I just want you to know I am truly sorry and you deserve better. I don't expect a reply, I expect I'll be blocked and I completely understand. But I never got an apology from the woman that actually fucked my husband and I don't want to be that. I hate myself.

Kayla: The comment that followed [On May 12] about vile and despicable actions by both parties was not in response to me learning about sexual assault. It was in response to me learning about a consensual affair. She proceeded to end the video by saying she knows she will be blocked, that she doesn't expect a response from me, and that is exactly what I did. But then, eight days later, I received a message from someone who said she was Naomi's friend and roommate. I just wanted to be left alone.

Naomi: She wanted the truth. He was still lying. He said she deserved to know everything, OK, he said she deserved to know everything. By golly, did I agree!

I wanted to include this while also stating that Naomi eventually did include the full message in a follow up video that shows me being the one to want to apologize to Kayla and come forward and admit to the consensual affair. But also within this second video, again, Naomi shows a message that reads as follows and it is from her.

Naomi: Don't you dare try and put any of this on me. I never asked you to cheat. The last night I said I wanted to do more because you said that had been your favorite part, and then you played it like you didn't want it again. It seems only you are allowed to express any kind of lust. When I finally do it, because you've been doing it, you never like it.

Naomi King took those screenshots quite some time ago, because when I pull up our Instagram, they're gone. And in regards to the allegation about me pressuring in the absence of lube, it was her who, on our second day, was repeatedly asking me to buy lube despite me saying I did not want to have sex. She went as far as to bring up a nearby sex shop on her phone's map app.

Naomi: Until you found out I was a sugar baby and I had someone else. Suddenly another fire lit up under your ass and you wanted me again. I feel terrible for cheating on Kel. He treats me better than anyone I have ever been with.

Kel is a married man Naomi was seeing at the time. This is an example of twisting the truth to fit her narrative. There were instances of Naomi King telling me things along the lines of "It's better to ask forgiveness than permission" in regards to the fact that because I am bisexual and in a hetero relationship with Kayla, she has told me it's OK for me to seek sexual relations with a man, but not a woman. With Naomi King being non-binary, she was referencing that there's a grey space. But it is my fault that those lines were crossed and I take accountability for that. And this is something that Kayla and I have had to work on for years.

Naomi: Weeks after that happened, I made my video "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent, and Assault". I did not think he was keeping tabs on me. And in case you're wondering if there have been any allegations against Daniel, there was. He told me about it. That's how I know about it. He told me it was false and that there's no way it could be true because he wasn't there at the time. Turns out he told Discord something different. He told Discord he was there, but he was only there to visit his father.

I fully admit at the time I had no idea who was making those allegations and I had an instinctual response to just say no, absolutely could not be anybody. I only visited my dad for a few weeks that summer in Nashville before going off to study in Ireland. I had been on a couple of Tinder dates while I was visiting my dad, but obviously none of those dates aligned and with what was being alleged in these posts at all. But I did not know for sure who this person was until I worked with my lawyer when I sent off my Cease and Desist and she was able to find out it was Madison, a person whose full name I will not say here because after I sent my Cease and Desist, she did delete her posts.

At that point, I filed a police report against Madison, as well. One of the reasons I didn't suspect Madison was the one to make these accusations was, one, it did not align with our encounter in Nashville at all. In addition, after I got back from studying Ireland, Madison came to visit me in Virginia on her way to Florida, driving several hours out of her way to spend a weekend with me. I have an eyewitness testimony from my college roommate who can talk about meeting Madison that weekend. All I asked Mark to do was say what he knew for sure about that weekend when Madison visited:

Mark: My name is Mark. I was Daniel's roommate, one of Daniel's roommates, our senior year of college. So that would be fall 2016 through spring 2017. We lived in a house together in Fredericksburg. At one point, Madison came to visit Daniel. I didn't have eyes on the correspondence between them before her arrival or after her departure. She was very cordial the entire time she was in the house. Daniel introduced her to us. They spent a bit of time together in his room behind closed doors. So I didn't see what was going on back there, but I did see her walk throughout the house a couple of times. She didn't communicate to me that she was there against her will or any intent to leave or desire to leave or anything like that.

On a final note regarding Madison, she had a pattern of appearing when I specifically either hit milestones on the channel or released a book. When I first heard about someone making accusations about me is when I hit 100,000 subscribers. She then followed up with another post when I released my book Breach of Peace, and with what the last video was here on the channel, I can't help but feel like it's still a thing.

Naomi: We got back to the hotel. I went to the pool. He stayed in the hotel room for hours.

This was another lie from Naomi. I wasn't sure if I should take the time to disprove it here in the video, but I think it's important to display a pattern of dishonest behavior from Naomi. We went out on excursions the entire time we were in Las Vegas, including going to a Other World Universe grocery store experience art house that is available in Las Vegas. Here is a receipt for me making purchases at the gift shop there for Naomi and myself. On that first full day, though, I also spent many hours with Naomi by the pool giving my thoughts on a short story she had given me about a polyamorous rock band. I want to end this section of the video by giving context to the clip you saw at the beginning, which was from the personal individual one she sent me after I had blocked her on several platforms.

Naomi: I wish I could take it all back. I wish I could take it all fucking back. It was not worth losing what we had. It was not worth putting Kayla through all this fucking torture. It wasn't even slightly worth it. I wish I'd said no. I wish you'd never gone to Vegas. I feel so fucking guilty because of what I did, because of what I did to Kayla.

I fully believe both Naomi and I, by the end of the weekend, regretted our actions. But even in the message that she redacted and showed you on screen, I was the one who demanded we confess, who came to Kayla and told the truth. Naomi, we both had regrets that weekend and we both felt terrible when we were leaving, but I'm not accusing you of assaulting me. Admittedly, I am only showing clips from full videos to demonstrate how Naomi King has decided, after time has gone on, to greater distort the truth to make me look worse about a situation we both regretted at the time. And then you can see all of this come to a head in the video that made me contact legal counsel. And you will see why when Naomi King gave these thoughts. Naomi released this video after sending us those videos and we didn't respond, already misrepresenting the situation and adding untrue details:

Naomi: I'm going to use men and women as an example. You can swap the genders and not all men, but I'm just going to, you know, for example. You know, there's a lot of men—not all—that will date and say things that make the person they're dating feel as though, OK, they are looking for long term, this is something that they're going for.

Naomi released this after sending us those videos and we didn't respond.
Already misrepresenting the situation and adding untrue details.

Eventually they reach a point where they're like, OK, yep, I will sleep with this person, that woman in this situation, she is consenting to an intimate experience with someone that she has trusted and is getting to know and wants to be with her in the long term and he has essentially made her feel that way emotionally. And then a lot of the times they'll fuck and then the guy will be like, alright, peace. That's assault. You know, and then you know, if, if the woman is like, well, OK, fuck, now I feel completely used. I feel completely violated, especially when it comes to the things of, you know, you thought you were going to have some kind of sex and then he did something that you didn't fucking want. But then the police are like, "But you consented to it. Now you're just regretting it afterwards." What do you think?

In her 2023 video, Naomi King also accuses me of trying to use her as a therapist for three years in an attempt to get her in bed. I was not the one wanting to buy lube and escalate things. I want to iterate that again here and prove Naomi King was the one pressuring me to go further. Then in the same video she applies this to Madison, who I only knew for a summer meeting on a few dates in 2016 and only saw one final time after getting back from studying in Ireland and not being in contact with her that I can recall much, if all, while there. This narrative about me being an emotional manipulator is outright false and did not happen.

In our relationship. I did talk to Naomi about a lot of personal things but I certainly told her many things about myself that Madison never knew. Madison and I only saw each other a few times and did not text that much in between. It has also been brought to my attention that Naomi King, in her second video posted Saturday, also admitted to writing three songs about me before our trip to Las Vegas that include lyrics like: You, you're all I want because I can't have you. You're all I want because you found someone new. You're all I want. Now I've got no one. And You can't blame me if I feel to some extent it's not cheating if we never change the way we've been. Baby, if I come and take your hand, there's a part of me that doesn't care if she's your girlfriend before finally, Maybe I'm being mean. I guess I am, but you love it, don't you? We both have that darkness. And if you think about it, you're her man only because I didn't say yes back then. All that did happen that weekend was a consensual affair that I do believe both Naomi King and I feel horrible about.

And I have two final things I want to say, and one of them is in response to my last video. In my last video I certainly came across lawyered-up and yes, I absolutely am. I understand why creators were quick to make videos backing Naomi King after seeing her video. Her video was heartbreaking and full of lies. I ask that if you could, please update your audience on the full facts now.

I understand I am not going to win over everybody and there are still going to be people who want to send hate my way because I did have an affair and it's the worst thing I've ever done. , and Kayla and I are still trying to move on from it. But the one person who's been receiving hate that has absolutely done nothing wrong in this entire situation is Kayla. For two years, she and I have been trying to grow, heal, and move on, and this has made it harder.

Kayla: I'm going to keep this very short. Yes, two years ago Daniel had an affair while we were dating. But let me be clear, I love Daniel and he has put in hard work and years of therapy and has proven to me that he's the person that I want to spend my life with. Yes, he is imperfect. But he is also my best friend, my business partner, the love of my life, and he's earned back my trust. It's the reason why I agreed to marry him when he proposed to me in September. And I have been there for him through all of this, just as he's been there for me. But please try to remember that I am also a person. I have seen the videos and the comments dissecting and placing judgment on my choice to stay with Daniel. I have lost friends over this, some who are unwilling or unable to stay in my life, and living this under a microscope under the public eye has been humiliating, traumatizing, and incredibly isolating. So all I ask for right now is just kindness and support.

In addition, many people I know have been sending Naomi King's video to authors I've interviewed or sponsors that I've had, and the damage of that is going to take a long time to recover from. I don't know when it'll become OK to post regular content on the channel again here moving forward, but thank you for watching. more soon.

Daniel's publisher publishes his statement of support for Daniel, and his criticism, of Naomi on multiple channels.

The same busy day, February 17, Daniel's publisher, Bryce O'Connor, CEO, Wraithmarked Creative LLC issued a statement on the allegations against Daniel by Naomi on Patreon, Twitter, Reddit, Threads, and Facebook:

> Early this morning, Naomi King posted a third video in regard to the allegations she leveled against Daniel Greene last week. It is not as difficult to watch as the other two she posted (and is much shorter), so I recommend reviewing it when you have the opportunity. Just an hour or two ago as of this statement, Daniel and Kayla also posted a response video extrapolating on their side of the story in much greater detail. Regrettably, the first two videos posted by Naomi King have been taken down, but they can still be found if you search Reddit and other places.
>
> I have been carefully watching the situation unfold. I have watched all of Naomi's videos. I have watched all of Daniel's and Daniel & Kayla's videos. I have come to a personal conclusion that I think most of you will feel is fairly obvious: it is apparent to anyone paying attention that Naomi has, at best, been withholding information and providing partial truths that make the straightforward accusations she put out in her first video infinitely more nuanced, and has, at worst, put out a story that is functionally entirely fictitious. With each passing day it seems more and more to be the latter.
>
> While Naomi's accusations currently seem (in my opinion) to be rapidly unraveling, we stand as firmly by the belief that accusers should be heard and respected as we do that the accused have the right to tell their side of the story and have the opportunity to show themselves innocent. Sexual assault is a toxic issue in many creative industries, and too often abuse is left unreported because people are scared to come forward.
>
> As of now, that is where we are going to be leaving all this. There may be more conversation to be had regarding other aspects of this situation that have come to light over the last week, but moving forward, Wraithmarked will be dismissing Naomi's accusations from consideration regarding any action we take in the future unless something changes very unexpectedly.
>
> Thank you to the incredible number of you who have been supportive as we have navigated this minefield. Thank you to all of you who work to help Kayla, in particular, recover from this, whether that be a simple comment of support on her most recent video or continuing to follow Daniel and the videos and content they hopefully continue to put out together in the future.

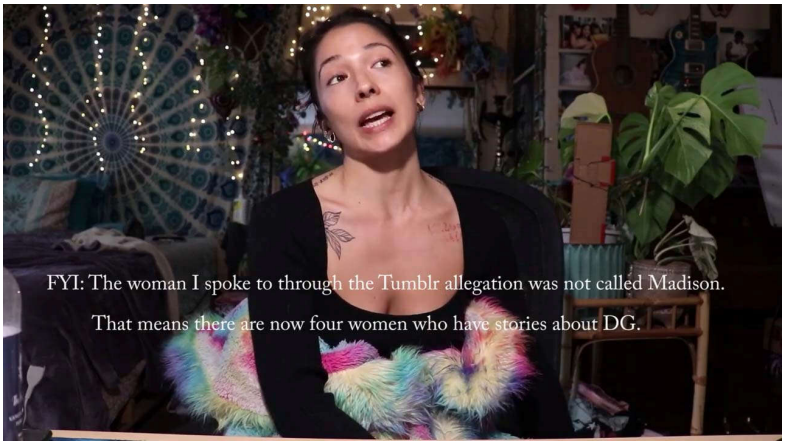
Naomi escalates her attack in an eight-minute video, with a recording of allegations from Madison.

The same day, Naomi continued to escalate in "Another Allegation Against Daniel Greene," with Madison's statement:



FYI: The woman I spoke to through the Tumblr allegation was not called Madison.
That means there are now four women who have stories about DG.

Transcript: Hey guys, a couple days after I posted the Cease and Desist video, I was contacted by somebody who claims that she also had similar experiences with Daniel Greene. Again, this is just an allegation, I'm not saying that it is true. She wants to remain anonymous. However, she is OK with me sharing her voice. Again, this is just an allegation. I am not saying that it's true, but somebody reached out and she wanted to share her story. So I will be putting some audio from our chat in here.

Madison: We went to University of Mary Washington [Fredericksburg, Virginia, about 85 km from Washington, DC] together. We were in the same year, 2013, and we both graduated 2017. We started hooking up and we were kind of in the same, like, friends group, the friends-with-benefits thing, like adjacent circles. This was sophomore year, so it was early fall when we started hooking up. So, yeah, when the first time we were in my dorm room, we'd never talked about sex or hooking up or anything before. And yeah, he just grabbed me. And like, like you were saying in your video, he did the same thing, like the very aggressive tongue action and mouth. Yeah. So I remember at the time, I was like, really surprised by it. But I was like, OK, I did want to have sex, so fine, you know, whatever. But it was surprising. When we had sex, he choked me and bit me really hard without my permission, which I wasn't OK with. Yeah, after the sex ended, he asked me. He's like, is there anything that you want different for next time? Like was there anything that you weren't okay with?

It was like this whole thing, like I really prioritize communication and we need to like be on the same page. And I was like, wow, like actually, thank you so much for asking. The choking and biting I wasn't okay with. And the next time we had sex, he choked me and bit me again. Of course. Yeah. And so, you know, I was 19. So in the moment, I was like, OK, fine. Like, this isn't worth bringing up again. Like it's going to be ignored. There was one time where I was hung over. I think in general, he just, anytime someone told him no, it was always oh, well, like it was like a challenge. Yeah. If I was like, I have a hangover, I'm not really feeling up to it. He'd wheedle like, oh, I'd be so good, I can be so good with the hangover, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah.

There was one time in the winter that he was, I believe, living in Silverspring, Maryland. This was would have been winter 2014 or maybe early 2015, and I was at Ultrabar in Washington, DC. It's one of the few clubs where you can get into under 21. My ride, like, ditched me, the person that I was with, and I called Daniel and I asked him if he could pick me up. He did, which I did appreciate, but then when he was driving me back to my house he pressured me into giving him roadhead to wake him up on the drive. I was in a relationship. I didn't really feel good about it but I didn't really feel like I could say no because I was like, "You are going out of your way for me." He pulled over to the side of the road and he got like a really intense expression on this face and asked if I was on birth control. And I was like, "No, like, I'm not." And I think otherwise he would have come inside of me. But as it was, he just jerked off onto me. Definitely.

I was, like, watching your video and I was talking to my friend, too. And 'cause my friend, she's like, I told her about some of the stuff before and she's like, "Yeah, like, it's just like, there's a lot of patterns happening here." Let's see. I broke up with that boyfriend. Short relationship, but I was like, "I don't want to have sex with anyone." He kept pressuring for sex. There was one point he was just really pressuring, and I was like OK, fine. As an alternative I let him spank me and use a vibrator on me and he used it so hard I bled. Which was which has never happened before or since. It was not a big vibrator, but that was unpleasant. And when I got into another relationship, this is towards the end of sophomore year, he was pressuring me to make out with my female friend. And like this is, I feel like, you know this, like he kept pressuring me to make out with my female friend and I was like, "I'm in a relationship. I'm not going to do it, Not this time." And when I kept saying no, he eventually was like, pointed to me, and was like, "That's what I love so much about her, like she's so loyal, like, I respect this so much about her. As if he hadn't been, you know, spending the last five minutes trying to peer-pressure me into cheating on my boyfriend.

So it's, yeah, it's like an unattainability thing. Like, as soon as you pull back more, it's, oh, I need this. I have to get it. That's it. For me, he would not shut up about the time that he worked in a woman's shelter for a summer. Like, I don't know if he still was mentioning that, but it was like every single time. Even my friends were like, good God, this guy like, like I get it; he worked in a woman shelter. He was like, "Oh, you know, these poor women. I just felt for their experiences" and yadda, yadda, yadda. It was terrible. He told me once too, because, you know, he has this whole like, "I'm, I'm really woke and I care and I'm progressive and I'm an ally." And he told me once he's like, "I don't date black girls, like black girls aren't my type." Just straight up said that. Like, OK, you didn't have to say that. Like, that's an inside thought to have. I don't know. Black Lives Matter, just, you know, not unless, you know, they're black women that seem interested in him.

The Ultrabar was maybe the most specific, but I'm sure he's pressured plenty of women into roadhead, too, so, you know. He got me to do it while he was driving and then he wanted to finish, so he stopped by the side of the road, which is like, I don't do that crap. It's deeply unsafe. Yeah, but, you know, it is what it is. Like, it's one of those things where at the time you're like, "Oh jeez, well, he really did go out of his way to pick me up and I don't have a lot of options and, oh boy, I guess I can."

So like I feel like with him, it was always super like even back then, you kind of got the sense that it was really like practiced. Like the stuff that he'd talk about, be good at talking the talk with like kink and communication and, like, I'm in the kink scene now, and it's this guy would never ... I can't even imagine him being led into any of the clubs that I go to. Like, he'd be kicked out in a heartbeat. It's wild. And I told my friend like years back I was like, there's going to be some allegations against him eventually. I was like, I just, I know it's going to happen. I guess there's been more than one. You're not crazy. It wasn't just you like imagining things.

Oh, there is something else I forgot to say. He absolutely had sex at his dad's house before. He would tell me about some of the times that he had sex at his dad's house. So I don't know if that changes anything. But like, "I was only there to visit my dad so I wouldn't be having sex." Like bullshit. He told me about the stuff that he did at his dad's place. I don't know if that's any change to anything at all, but, you know, there you go.

I said, honestly, I'd seriously been waiting for years for something to come out. And it is weirdly, incredibly, vindicating. So.

After Naomi's and Daniel's videos flew back and forth on the 17th of February, the online press picked up the developing story. Reporting, analysis, and commentary appeared in many articles, podcasts, and videos. This article, on BoredPanda, summarizes Naomi King's sexual assault accusation vs. Daniel Greene's defense as of February 19:

Bored Panda publishes a report titled, "Shameful BookTube Crisis Deepens as Sexual Assault Accuser Unknowingly Confirms Consent."

WORLD FEB 19, 2025 "Shameful": BookTube Crisis Deepens As SA Accuser Unknowingly Confirms Consent Michelle Tian and Lei RV

Shameful BookTube Crisis Deepens As SA Accuser Unknowingly Confirms Consent, by Michelle Tian and Lei RV, Bored Panda World News, 19 February 2025:

On February 11, the online book community faced an unexpected, sudden shift when YouTuber Naomi King accused well-known BookTuber and internet personality Daniel Greene—for misconduct and sexual assault—but it turns out these claims aren't as true as many of her supporters believed.

The 31-year-old first posted an emotional 34-minute-long video on her channel a little over a week ago—one that's since been archived. She went into the details of her relationship with Greene, from the moment they met to the alleged incident that permanently changed their dynamic. Daniel Greene was accused of sexual assault on February 11 when Naomi King released a video that blew up among the book community. "Two years ago, YouTuber Daniel Greene threatened to wipe me off social media. So if I disappear, you'll know who did it," she began. Things first started in 2023 when King and Greene planned to meet up with one another for the first time in Las Vegas, as reported by SK Pop. Since she landed before him, she "spent the day getting baked by the pool," and looked forward to hanging out with the Fantasy News creator as nothing more than just friends.

But upon his arrival, Greene allegedly forced her into sexual relations, despite the fact that it was past midnight and King was anything but in her right mind. "He turned up at midnight, sober and awake, and pressured me, half asleep and on drugs, into sexual things that he and I had agreed beforehand would not happen," King accused in her video. "I repeatedly asked him if we could just sleep and talk in the morning. I was halfway through a sentence when he pushed me over and shoved his tongue in my mouth." She continued to describe Greene's attempts to have sex without her consent before doing other explicit acts and talking "about how long he'd dreamt about it." "It was fucking disgusting," King choked through tears.

The next morning, she claimed that the two decided the alleged incident should never have happened, setting the boundary to just remain friends—only for Greene to reportedly go back on his word and assault her as soon as they were alone. After getting home from Vegas, King contacted Greene's then-fiancée and now-wife about what had happened. Things first started when the two met in Las Vegas. "I needed her to know that I didn't want it," she said. "I needed her to know that he was sober and wide awake and I was half-asleep and on drugs. Which he knew." To her, Greene was nothing but "a lying, cheating piece of shit," noting other instances where the Internet personality had been accused of rape.

About a month after King's trip to Vegas, she posted a video titled "A Conversation about Manipulation, Consent, and Assault", where she detailed how a "friend that turned out not to be a friend" had sexually harassed her. While she never explicitly mentioned Greene, his legal team sent her a cease and desist letter eight days later, saying she had to take down the video within 24 hours or face a lawsuit for "slander and defamation."

It's no surprise that the backlash against Greene immediately followed King's accusations just over a week ago, according to Fandom Pulse. Long-time collaborators with the BookTuber cut ties with him instantly. One Piece Podcast wrote on X, "In light of recent events we will not be inviting Daniel Greene back on the show for further guest appearances. Additionally, we have removed his past appearances from our podcast feed, YouTube, and Patreon." Dragonmount, a Wheel of Time fan site, also addressed the situation, saying, "In this house, we believe survivors of sexual assault and stand with you," and provided resources for help. The book community erupted with noise, with many long-time fans of Greene pointing accusatory fingers at him.

"I can't believe this. He did it twice to her. Jesus Christ," one person said in disbelief. "You never know people. The fact that she knew she had to be airtight with the receipts, which are pretty damning, hurt me because I know people will still try to blow holes in her case. Fucking hell." Another added, "This is a tough watch as a long-time viewer of Daniel. The behavior she describes is gut-churning. The fact that his attorney sent a cease and desist letter in the first place is telling, not even getting into the messages she showed. "Unfortunately, I can't even muster up surprise. I just feel disappointed. If he makes a response video, I'll watch it. Otherwise, I don't see myself watching his regular content going forward." Initially, the backlash was all directed at Greene.

A response video followed. On February 13, Greene broke his silence and came forward with a minute-long story of what happened between him and King, from his point of view. "Hello. My name is Daniel Greene," he introduced himself. "This is an important message in response to various false allegations made against me by Naomi King of alleged sexual assault in a campaign launched on YouTube and more. Let me be clear. I had consensual sex with Naomi King. Yes, it was an affair." While he did not bring up any evidence, he promised that would come later. First, he planned to take legal action against King and sue her for libel. And that was that.

Four days later, on February 17, things came to an abrupt halt as King seemed to walk back on her allegations—causing those who were following the scandal to backtrack. After mocking Greene for his scripted statement, King explained that she was a "sugar baby," meaning she provided the girlfriend experience to men without commitment, in exchange for money.

Greene came out with his own response video, saying that although he was cheating on his then-fiancée, the sex with King was completely consensual. Contrary to what she said beforehand, King stated that the two reportedly took the drugs together while in Vegas before sleeping with one another, admitting that she undressed in front of him because she "always sleeps naked."

Greene was apparently coming off "really fucking strong" and discussed money before King agreed, "I could do that." "I acknowledge that I did not fight him off," she said, which was a complete 180 from the claims she had made in her video on February 11. She apologized to any victims or survivors of sexual assault for trivializing the issue but did not offer any sentimental statement towards Greene.

The BookTuber soon recognized how the tables had turned and clarified two things on the same day: Yes, he cheated on his then-fiancée. No, he did not sexually assault King because the sex they had was 100% consensual.

The entire back-and-forth of the whole situation has caused online communities to flock to Reddit threads to share their thoughts. The majority of the book community turned against King. "What an absolute shit show. Well damn I learned something new as I completely bought Naomi's story … it seemed so legit and real," one user admitted. "Man this entire situation is definitely going to make some not believe victims which ain't the way it should be but teaches us all that we need to wait before vilifying someone. What a mess." Others didn't hesitate to turn on King, labeling her as a "genuine psycho."

From the beginning, there were red flags, according to commenters:

WishLucky9075: Nah Naomi King has bad intentions. Don't use their disorder as an excuse for false accusations of rape.

SoGoodAtAll: I think it was very apparent how unhinged she was in that first video. So many red flags. People are so eager to jump on the cancel train. All his little Youtube buddies hopped on it so fast… i guess he learned who his friends are. That woman should be jailed.

kpofasho1987: What an absolute shit show. Well damn I learned something new as I completely bought Naomi's story …. it seemed so legit and real. Man this entire situation is definitely going to make some not believe victims which ain't the way it should be but teaches us all that we need to wait before vilifying someone. What a mess.

MafuLe Trekkie: She is going to be sued into oblivion over this.

Discombobulated Till: Charges should be pressed, she did this to ruin his life and has partly succeeded as part of his livelihood is gone.

AidenMarquis: She has soiled a man's career and undermined other women who were really hurt from coming forward and being believed. There should be consequences for behavior like this.

ButIDigr3ss: All I'm gonna say is I'd hate to have friends like Daniel's.

NebulaNi101: I'm disgusted by how people behaved in this situation. The speed at which the fantasy and sci-fi community on social media decided to ruin Daniel Greene's life was mind-blowing. Why not wait for events to unfold? You can show empathy for the alleged victim without immediately calling for blood on the other side. Some BookTubers, you could almost feel their glee at the opportunity for views and gaining subscribers from the downfall of a fellow creator. Did his so-called friends even bother to reach out to hear his side of the story? Let's consider the impact this situation has had on his life and his wife's life (the biggest victim in all of this).

Endless_01: What's really shameful is all the booktubers, so called friends, posting videos immediately trying to get some juice from this whole drama. That was not real support, that was virtue signaling and jumping on the hatewagon to gain views. They have been deleting the videos (Library of A Viking, shame on you) and deleting their initial comments of support for Naomi and attacking Daniel (eckartsladder had the most liked comment on DG response and now that comments is gone). This was just a huge wake up all to show me that these people are leeches and vultures.

Vincebourgh: I feel the most for his fiancée. She already had to go through all that with him privately only to be dragged into the public eye.

Moonshoeslol: Both are toxic but in a coughing baby vs nuclear bomb type way. Yeah cheaters are scum but fabricating sexual assault allegations to destroy someone you don't like is next level.

Strange_Ride_582: I don't like that he cheated but it sounds like he's been working on those issues and doesn't deserve the backlash he got. I enjoy his content and it hurt to hear he assaulted someone. I'm glad that's not the case and I hope he comes through this alright.

2020visionaus: He cheated, felt guilt, apologized told partner they are trying to move on in peace and she's dragging up drama.

Nephelodusa: This has been a wild rollercoaster.

Eskaver: As I said before and stand by, I remain agnostic to the allegations, hoping for accountability and resolution. Nevertheless, I do think the discourse has run its course and all anyone can do is wait and proceed with new discussion, engagement, and discoveries. I believe he's continuing with a lawsuit or at least is not stopping any legal actions he can take. Good for him. There needs to be repercussions for false allegations. She claimed that implying a future together, sleeping together, and then it not working out is "sexual assault". So, she's not sane. Aside from directly hurting actual victims of sexual assault.

Joereaves: She flat out said she was a sugar baby. So she knew the relationship was contractual. That's not a relationship that turns into anything real. Pretty Woman is a movie not a documentary.

Tgsbbh: A rotten woman. A danger to innocent men and a danger to us women who've actually been assaulted. She deserves all of the backlash she's getting and more.

megalej34: Agreed as a survivor seeing women falsely accuse men is revolting just makes it harder to actually be believed.

Lululoohoo: Unfortunately this is what makes many 2nd guess or not believe women. Rotten people like her who make this kind of shit up for ... what? clout? likes? beyond gross and I hope he sues her to oblivion.

Coreypichler: The point is to believe the accuser and defendant both until you can figure things out if possible. The point is to not dismiss anyone's story until more information is known. The believe women slogan has the same problem most slogans have, too pithy! Just like Black Lives Matter didn't mean only BLM, but slogans are gonna slogan.

Donnapeluda: My wife accused me twice for battery, luckily I had good alibis and was never charged. I was dragged out of my house handcuffed both times. I broke up with her and she wouldn't have it, made my life hell. All I wanted was for her to leave me alone. The police were no help, the fact I was a doorman didn't help. Even today, more then 30 years later, I still get looks from some people. Woman who do these thinks should be tried. It doesn't help woman who are really in trouble.

byzantiume2: You should have pressed charges. It would have helped the divorce settlement and depending on where she filed the report, mad story jail time.

stephyg1980: This is so messed up. All it takes is a few toxic people and nobody is believed plus people's lives and careers are ruined. Johnny Depp, Manson and now this guy.

sergiobicerra_1: Fake sexual assault charges should be punished the same time the innocent were going to serve.

byzantiume2: Any false changes are illegal, most often a felony if the charges brought were of a serious nature. Financial damages can be sought in civil court, usually they include damage to reputation, distress and covering any costs of legal fees etc.

mikefitzpatrick: Actions have consequences. She needs to have her devices taken from her for a period of time, just the way someone who is convicted of this type of thing would experience. Where's the righteous indignation now? All of those people who pulled the plug on the guy when she set about smearing him? That any one individual, with no fact checking, can cause this kind of uproar and potentially ruin someone's life is indefensible. She needs to be tarred and feathered. He obviously is no prince, but she accused him of rape, a rape that didn't happen.

afke-krikke: I've never heard of these people before but I'm baffled: "King explained that she was a "sugar baby," meaning she provided the 'girlfriend' experience to men without commitment, in exchange for money." A sugar baby ... is that what they call a prostitute these days?

Peruvianfallsky: Wait, you mean punishing people without due process can go badly? How bizarre!

Zanemeek: Isn't this how things work? Some injustice is glossed over or ignored for ages but then the voices get loud enough that people start to pay attention. But instead of ensuring that the issue is no longer swept under the rug, we swing wildly in the other direction to the point where we're ready to instantly trash someone over mere allegations based on nothing more than a social media post or video. In the meantime, the truth and innocent people get chewed up and spit out and many real victims don't get a chance at justice all because someone wanted attention, got caught lying and now it's next to impossible to get anyone to listen.

Queenbead: It's women like her that make it hard for actual sexual assaultd victims to be believed.

byzantiume2: Fake police reports, libel, wasting court and law enforcement resources, criminally and civilly, she will hopefully face a lot of consequences. If she made statements under oath, you can add perjury. But in many places it's already a felony and the case for damages and covering the legal fees of the accused is definitely going to incur a large settlement.

Andreiiepure: Remember boys, never stick your dick in crazy.

Kcasnar: This is why "always believe women" is bullshit.

Mike Paul, Reputation Doctor, makes public statement that police in the USA and Canada took reports of Naomi's "cyber crimes."

On February 20, Mike Paul made this public statement, posted on his Instagram, Facebook, X, and LinkedIn:

> Today the police in the United States and the police in Canada were both informed and took police reports regarding Naomi Orosa (aka Naomi King) regarding ongoing, alleged, cyber crimes, including harassment and other serious crimes. Naomi was warned several times, but Naomi just won't listen. Now Naomi will have to deal with the consequences of her many alleged, illegal and damaging actions. More consequences and information to come soon.

Naomi rescinds the apology she published 4 days ago, now saying it applies to Kayla and sexual assault survivors, not Daniel.

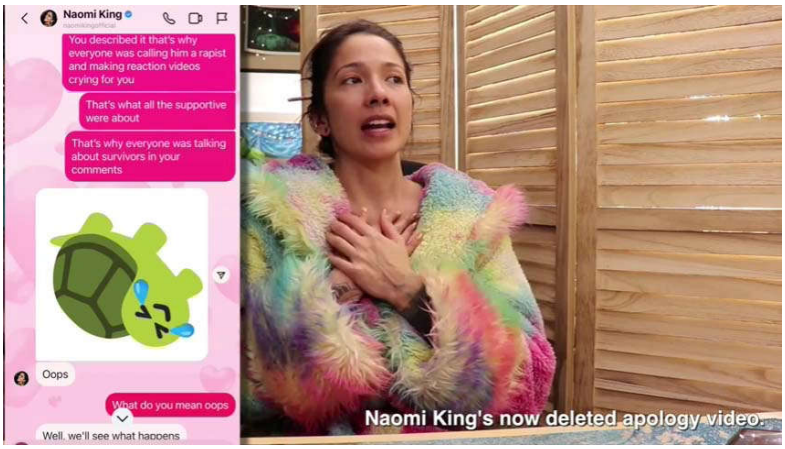
February 21, on Instagram, Naomi rescinded her February 17 apology:

naomikingofficial 3h
Follow
Casual reminder that my apology video was NOT me admitting to falsely accusing DG.
I stand by my statement that he pressured me into sexual things I didn't want.
The apology video was to SA victims.
I took it down because people were taking it as an admission to falsely accusing.
I'll be explaining myself whether you like it or not, but it's taking time to put together.
I am NOT rescinding that he did sexual things to me without my consent.

Daniel expands his detailed rebuttal with more details.

February 22, Daniel expanded his rebuttal in "Proving Naomi King's Malicious Intent," which gathered 170,000 views and 1,700 comments.

> Transcript: We have received information from someone in communication with Naomi King that she is not done, not offline, not on YouTube, and not on her other social media platforms. As a means to preemptively deter Naomi King from causing more harm, we would like to share evidence proving Naomi King's malicious intent when it comes to harming myself and Kayla, as well as sexual assault survivors. You can see in this message here, shared by a person in direct communication with Naomi explaining why her videos, falsely accusing me of sexual assault, are wrong. And, in my opinion, Naomi in response is clearly mocking rape. The message reads as follows.



Naomi King
You described it that's why everyone was calling him a rapist and making reaction videos crying for you
That's what all the supportive were about
That's why everyone was talking about survivors in your comments
Oops
What do you mean oops
Well, we'll see what happens
Naomi King's now deleted apology video.

> Person: You described it. That's why everyone was calling him a rapist and making reaction videos crying for you. That's what all the supportives were about. That's why everyone was talking about survivors in your comments.
>
> Naomi: [laughing emoji] "Oops."
>
> Person: "What do you mean, Oops?"
>
> Naomi: "Well, we'll have to see what happens."
>
> I have a right to defend myself in the court of public opinion and law. We are sharing this evidence not just because it has to do with me, but because unfortunately, there are viewers of this channel who have been victims of rape or sexual assault themselves and who are affected by Naomi King's video. And here you can see Naomi King making light of their experience of sexual assault and rape, and mocking them. This it is not funny. It is not funny to accuse someone falsely of rape and it is not funny to mock real rape victims. And I will say once again, Naomi King and I had a consensual affair two years ago. Naomi King has already uploaded, and deleted, an apology video addressed to myself, Kayla, and to sexual assault victims:
>
> Naomi: I am so sorry to every survivor that I have hurt in doing this. That was not my intent, and it breaks my heart how many people I have hurt. This is not normal behavior. This is not OK, and I'm checking myself. I am so sorry to every survivor that I have hurt in this. I am also, you know, horrifically sorry. I want to apologize to Kayla, so much, and Daniel, I am devastated by how many people I have hurt. I have become that person that has set survivors back and that revolts me. I am not OK with my behavior. It's really gross. I agree with your comments and I am going to take a step back and reflect. I don't like this version of me so I'm going to put an end to this.
>
> Then taking to Instagram to say she is going to accuse me once again:
>
> Naomi: Casual reminder that my apology video was NOT me admitting to falsely accusing DG. I stand by my statement that he pressured me into sexual things I didn't want. The apology video was to sexual assault victims. I took it down because people were taking it as an admission to falsely accusing. I'll be explaining myself, whether you like it or not, but it's taking time to put together. I am NOT rescinding that he did sexual things to me without my consent.
>
> If you believe that mocking rape or making light of sexual assault is not OK, then you need to read this message. More soon.

Naomi publishes an emotional 70-minute video, confirming she is a sex worker and describing her sex business model.

February 23, Naomi uploaded her last video, "Daniel Greene Part Three. Answering Questions, Apologies, and Goodbye." It is seventy minutes long. She revealed that she had been a sex worker, for years.

Transcript: Daniel's is still trying to shut me up. Daniel is still desperately trying to silence me by smearing me before I even post another video. I did not come forward thinking he had nothing. I came forward knowing he had everything and yet I still did it. So please think about it logically. It makes no sense for me to falsely accuse somebody who I know has everything. It makes no logical sense. This is now apology video number thirteen. No matter what I do, I can't say it right, but I am not leaving YouTube on that bullshit three minute apology or that interview I posted just 24 hours later.

I would like to make it clear that my last apology was NOT an admission of false accusations, and neither is this. I was and am apologizing to everyone I have hurt because of my actions, not that I lied about what happened to me.

I want to begin this video with I am not rescinding my statement that I was pressured into things that we had agreed beforehand wouldn't happen. I am not taking that back. That last apology video was not me admitting to falsely accusing anybody. That's not what that video was for. That video was me being devastated to the survivors of the sexual assault community because I did not mean to hurt them. That was the last thing I wanted. When I made that first video, I genuinely thought that I was going to be protecting people from getting hurt. I thought I was doing a good thing.

There's lots of things I'm going to try to cover here before I disappear, but I'm not leaving people with all these questions and things being left undone. For the people who don't want to listen to all the fluff, I'm going to get to the exact questions that people want to know.

One, are you accusing Daniel of rape? No, and I never did. There are a handful of people that understood this from watching the first video, but there's a lot of people that didn't. I never accused Daniel Greene of raping me. Not once. If you watch that video from beginning to end, even though it's not up anymore, I never once said Daniel Greene raped me. I never once said he assaulted me. I did not use those words when I made that video. I was very, very, very careful to only ever refer to what he did to me as pressuring me into things.

But I realized because from how overrun I was with my emotions and how, you know, how much of that trauma I was reliving in that moment telling the story, it really, really came off as stronger than what I had been intending. Like, I did not mean for that video to be a rape accusation. I did not mean for that video to blow up and have people calling him a rapist and sending that video to the people he works with. I did not want any of that, and I did not think that any of that was going to happen, genuinely. I thought his fans would be more critical of me. I thought they would not jump ship as quickly as they did. I am not accusing him of rape, and I never did. But I understand that that's what was taken away from the video. And I understand that because I didn't give any fucking trigger warnings, which is stupid because I always do that. Because I didn't give anybody trigger warnings, it meant that every single survivor who happened to click on that video was forced to relive their trauma completely without warning.

And I hate myself for that because I have been assaulted by other people. I have been raped by other people. I have severe PTSD. And for me, if I hear somebody start to talk about a story that has anything to do with this, if I even look at a title in the news, I get horrific images of graphic sexual violence in my head. And I realize that's exactly what I forced people to go through when they clicked on that video and I didn't give them a warning. So I can completely understand how every survivor watched that video, heard the story, saw the emotions, and didn't notice that I never called it rape. And I don't want to blame people. I don't want to blame people. The only time I used that word was when I was referring to the Tumblr allegation. I never accused him of raping me. And it breaks my heart that that's how that first video was taken, because he didn't rape me and now I'm being a false accuser. But I never said that he raped me. But that's what was taken away from the video. And I hate that. And that's fucked up and there's nothing that I can do.

That being said, there are people out there who did notice that I never said that he raped me. And there are people out there who have messaged me and said like, I didn't think that first video was a rape accusation. And like, thank fuck for those people. But are you accusing Daniel of rape? No, I am not and I never did. Are you admitting to falsely accusing him of rape? No, I never said Daniel Greene raped me. What I said was that he pressured me into things. That video wasn't me coming forward about Daniel raping me. That video was me coming forward about a negative experience I had had with him and that I had ended up speaking to somebody who had allegedly also had a negative experience with him. That was the entire point of video number one. It wasn't about me. It wasn't about my story. I just had to tell you that in order to get to the point of the Cease and Desist.

That video wasn't supposed to be ... like, that wasn't the goal of that video, and instead it became this huge blown up rape accusation that I never meant it to be. So are you admitting to falsely accusing him of rape? No, because I never said that he did, and I was very careful to never say that he did. I understand that what I described sounds like it, but I never said that he did. Trust me, I do not take rape accusations lightly. I hate false accusers. I hate false accusers. So the fact that, you know, I fucked this up by using the wrong goddamn words, by being too emotional in that video, those tears were real. Those tears and that panic attack were real. And that was part of the problem. If I had told that story without getting emotional, I think the message would have gotten across better.

But because I was telling that story for the first time in a long time, all that trauma was coming back out of me, and it was so easy to ignore the words that I used and just go off of feeling. And I fucked up. I wish I had not been crying. I am not retracting my statement that he pressured me into things that I didn't want, that we had previously agreed wouldn't happen. I'm not retracting that. But I am also stating that I did not mean to accuse him of rape. I did not mean for that video to turn into that.

I just watched Daniel's video and there was a couple things that I wanted to address. Please notice that Daniel only describes events leading up to, between, and after what happened. It doesn't matter what history you have with somebody in the moment if there is no consent. There is no consent. If it is not an enthusiastic yes, it is a no. I am going to try to do this in chronological order. Chronological order.

Daniel mentioned that I mentioned that he used me as a therapist to try to get me in bed. That's not at all what I said. That is not at all what I said. I just said that I was basically his therapist. That's about it. That was separate. I just kind of become people's therapists when I am their friend. I never said that he was doing that to try to get me in bed.

The songs that I wrote. I know people think it's a big deal that I wrote songs, but it's not. I have written hundreds of songs. Hundreds. I have released over 20 albums. For me personally, writing three songs is nothing. When it comes to the people that I've actually had feelings for over the years, they get albums. Like my ex-husband got like three albums to himself. I could literally write you a song about taking a shit.

For me, writing music, writing songs, it's just, it's just my way of getting my thoughts out. And there is one song that he did not focus on. So I wrote three and there was a specific order, the first one because I can't have you. That one is very dramatic because all of my dramatic feelings needed to go into one place. This is how I deal with my feelings, letters, writing, whatever. The second one, which is obviously the bitchy mean one that was just me trying to get my, like, angry feelings out about the situation. The song he didn't focus on was the last and final one. That was my conclusion of the entire situation. He did not read you the lyrics to this one, so I will:

Maybe one day if we're both single, maybe then we can try us out. But not till that day when we are both single. Because I can't do that to her. I know how it feels to love someone and find out that they've got another. I know how it feels, so I can't put somebody else through all that torture. I know how it feels. No matter how I long to let you in, I'm stronger. So this is it right here.

He chose to gloss over that because this was the third and final song. This was my conclusion. I know a lot of people are going to be like, you heard songs, you're fucking dramatic, I don't care what you think. In that sense, 1 was mushy, 1 was bitchy, and one concluded the story. And that is very clear in the third and final song that he chose not to focus on. All three of these songs were written in 2022. That was a year before the two of us hung out in Vegas.

I had a lot of people on Part 2 saying things like, you know, if you were really that high, how do you remember these moments? If you were really traumatized, why do you remember, like those specific moments so well? And the answer is, how could I forget the moments he was taking from me? What I didn't want to give are the moments that have been burned into the back of my mind. Those are the moments that have just been ingrained in my fucking skull. So what happened between those events is a blur. Like night one, I remember I told you that I was like super groggy, half asleep. I got up in my jumper and let him in. He commented on how high I was. I gave him half an edible and then I got back in bed. That is what I remember like distinctly. He claims I met him in the lobby, which I have zero recollection of. Like honestly I have zero recollection of going down to the lobby. But you know, now that I'm thinking about it, logically speaking, I think I would have had to have gone down to the lobby. So now, obviously now I'm just fucking up my own case because the bits between what he did are a blur.

He swears that I looked sober. I don't know how that would have even been physically possible considering I had been eating 40 milligrams every couple of hours the entire day, and had just been asleep. So like, physically speaking, there is no way I even could have looked sober because my eyes would have been red, my face would have been all smushed up from being in a pillow. Like, there is no physical way I could have looked sober.

I honestly don't remember going down to the lobby. I know some people don't count being able to, you know, get up and walk as half asleep. I do. And I know like, some people when they hear half asleep, they mean like so incapacitated that you can't get up. For me, that's not half asleep for me. That's so incapacitated that you can't get up. When I said that I was half asleep, I mean that I was like, I was groggy. I could still talk a little bit, but I wasn't like sober. I wasn't awake. I wasn't there. Clearly I was groggy enough that I don't remember leaving the room. But logically speaking, I think I would have had to, to let him up. I don't remember that. I can honestly tell you I don't remember that and I didn't lie about that, or at least I didn't mean to because I don't remember. He commented on how high I looked. That part is not a lie and that was why I asked him if you wanted to catch up. That is why he bit half an edible. I've had people questioning about the edibles, the drugs, and the numbers that I keep saying because I think the numbers either range from I was on 40 and he was sober or I'll say that I was on 50 and he was on ten. The reason I consistently say 40 milligrams is because the edibles that I bought upon arriving, they were 20 milligrams each. So I was taking 40 milligrams every couple of hours. Every two hours I would take another 40 milligrams so that I could kind of consistently stay on the vibe of 40 milligrams. Obviously, over time, that stuff will build, but it also kind of, you know, goes out of your system. So at least in my mind, I was trying to take 40 milligrams consistently throughout the day. Daniel claims he didn't know that. I don't know how the fuck he wouldn't. He ate half an edible, which was the 10 milligrams. I ate the other half, which is another 10 milligrams. But it takes about an hour for that stuff to kick in. So that's why sometimes I say that I was on 40 and he was sober because they hadn't kicked in yet. But if you include the edible that we shared upon him arriving, then I would have been on 50 and he would have been on 10. But that didn't kick in yet, so that's why that number keeps getting confusing.

So I went to bed at maybe like eight-ish, high as fuck, tired as fuck. I got maybe two hours of sleep and then I had to wake up to let him in. So I guess logically speaking I did have to go down to the lobby but I don't remember it like, honestly, but I think I would have had to. Either way, I was high as fuck. The parts that are ingrained in my mind are the parts that I didn't want. Like that is what I remember for my three days there. Like on day two I was with my tattoo artist for like six hours, and still that part of the day is just a blur to me. The part that I remember, the part that's distinct in my brain from day two was the moment he started pressuring me again leading up until the moment that he came again. Like, that is what is ingrained in my mind.

That is why I can tell you exactly what happened on night one during when he was doing that and day two during when he was doing that. Like the moments between, I remember, but now I feel like, in the blur, there's some moments that like were garbled. And, like for me, this just solidifies how high and groggy I was in my memory. I know for some people hearing that is now like, oh, you were sober enough to get up, but I'm kind of like, I wasn't sober enough to fucking remember. And I know that like the setup and the history and all that, but the reality about consent is like, it doesn't matter what history you have. If, in the moment, you are not obtaining consent, you do not have consent. Like I remember getting back in bed and dozing off. I remember him climbing into bed and he went from being in friend mode to having that predatory look in his eyes. I remember in bed the energy that was just coming off of him in waves.

That was why I turned away from him and that was why I put my arm between us to try to create a barrier. I remember he was saying things like, “Come on, we came all this way. Can we at least try something? You know, what's the difference between this and you being with your partner?” Because I kept telling him like, dude, you're in a relationship. And he kept bringing up the fact that, you know, my sugar daddy at that time was attached. He just kept bringing that up. And I remember I kept trying to explain to him that I know other people don't see the situation is different, but I do. Because, like, señor married man, he was a sugar daddy that paid to be on that website. It cost like a hundred bucks, if not more, for a guy to be on that website. He's nearing fifty. He was messaging multiple sugar babies. If it wasn't me, it was going to be somebody else. He was in a loveless marriage. His wife hadn't touched him in over a decade. He had been cheating for fifteen years, and his first affair lasted ten years. At home, he didn't get love or kisses or cuddles or sex. He did tell me he was separated when we met, but I did figure out he was not as separated as he said he was a couple months later. And I will hold myself accountable for the fact that I did continue to see him for a couple months after I found out. But, yeah, Daniel knew that the person I was seeing was attached, and he kept using that. He kept saying, like, “Oh, what's the difference? You're already seeing somebody that's in a relationship. Like, how is this any different? How is this any different? Like, come on, let's just try. We traveled all this way.” And I explained to Daniel, it was completely different because you're only two years into your relationship and you have love and your partner does kiss you and cuddle you and fuck you. You're young, you just entered your relationship.

“I traveled all this way. Why can't we try something? Can we just like, try a little bit? Can we try just like the tip?” So I turned onto my stomach to turn away from him, putting an arm between us to create a barrier to try to talk about things, to try to maybe be a part of the conversation because he was really pushing for like an arrangement. I decided to switch over to sugar baby mode and I was like, if this man wants to talk about an arrangement, I'm going to interview him the way that I interview men. I have certain requirements, and if you don't meet them, it's a hard no. I was going to ask him those questions and then give him a hard no because he didn't qualify.

My first requirement is that you have to live in Vancouver. I don't do long distance, or like casual, or like I'm occasionally going to see you. You have to live in Vancouver. I don't even date people from Seattle. I don't even date people from Whistler. If it's if you're not in Vancouver, it's a no. So that was the first question that he would have failed. The second thing is, I do not do casual or short term arrangements. I do not do one-off for me. I only do stable long-term arrangements where I'm going to see the person at least twice a month. That is another point he would have failed.

But here's the thing, I didn't even get to ask a question. I turned away from him. I put my arm in between us to create a barrier. I told him I had questions to ask him. He threw a number at me. I said I could do that, expecting more of a conversation, and then he pushed me over and put his tongue in my mouth. Now, I know to some people, “I could do that” is verbal consent, but to me it isn't. To me, it is not. Could is a maybe. Could is a possibly. Like, imagine if you were walking through the woods with a friend and you saw this cliff overlooking the water, and you were like, “You want to jump into the water?” And if your friend was like, I mean, "I could do that,” would you push him off the cliff? Would you push them off the cliff” Or is “I could do that” a maybe? A possibly? That's not a yes. “I could do that” is not a yes. I wouldn't push him off the fucking cliff. He pushed me over and shoved his tongue in my mouth. I didn't even get to ask him one question when I had established to him that I had questions to ask. Maybe there's people out there who think it isn't traumatizing to have one of your best friends repeatedly try to stick their penis in you while you're actively pushing him away, actively pushing his dick away from between your legs, saying on repeat, I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube.

What part of that sounds consensual? It doesn't matter what history you have with somebody. History with somebody in the past does not equate consent in the present or the future. Consent is something that you need at all times. I do not see how people think that was consensual. That is not how consent works. If I had looked at him, if I had still been facing him, if my body language had still been open to him, if I had looked him dead in the eyes and said I could do that, let's do this, it would have been different. That would be different. But that's not what happened. What happened was I wasn't looking at him. I was facing away from him. I had a barrier between us. I wanted to ask him questions. I told him I wanted to ask him questions. He threw a number at me and then pushed me over and shoved his tongue in my mouth. And, I need you to remember, he promised me that he wanted to give me that money as a friend.

He promised me beforehand he was going to spoil me as a friend. He didn't pay me for sex. He did not pay me for sexual things. He promised that money was as friends and then he took advantage of the situation. I didn't want it and I tried to talk him out of it. It didn't start because we leaned in for a kiss. It didn't start by sexy looks and gentle touching. It started because he pushed me over, shoved his tongue in my mouth, and climbed on top of me. That's not consent. Everything he did was just like him doing it and he was all very quick and then he tried sticking it in me and because I kept shoving his dick away from me and then he came and then I yelled at him to bring me a towel and then I wiped his cum off and I passed out.

The following morning he told me he had been puking and crying all night. Promised me it was never going to happen again. We went for breakfast at Truth and Tonic in the Venetian Hotel. I remember it took us forever to fucking find it. God that place is amazing. And I remember at breakfast, over breakfast, we discussed it again and he promised me again that it was never going to happen. We walked around afterwards for a little bit, and I think he had to go get his medication, so he mentioned that I mentioned lube because as I mentioned before, you know, I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube. I'm not having sex without lube. In order for me to enjoy anything remotely sexual, I need lube. Because of my medical conditions, I have idiopathic hypogonadotropic hypogonadism and that can that makes any kind of vaginal anything. It can be quite painful. I cannot self lubricate, I cannot stretch. So I think this was the part of the timeline that was confusing to me. I think it was after breakfast on the way back to the hotel, because we did walk around a little bit on the way back, I did look up somewhere to buy lube because in my mind I was kind of like, all right, well, fuck, he's already done to me once what I didn't want. Like, that night was non-consensual and my trauma response, because unfortunately for me, my trauma responses are not fight-or-flight but freeze-and-fawn, right? During the night. I froze. Trust me, I wish I was a fighter.

The following day, there was a part of me that did desperately want to reclaim what he had done. This has happened to me before and I know people who have done this. Sometimes when you go through something traumatic, there is a part of you that will try to reclaim that moment. That will try to be like, OK, you know, maybe if I get the things it would take for me to actually be able to enjoy any kind of intimacy or sexual act, you know, maybe if we get the things it would take, maybe I can be a part of this conversation. Maybe this can be an equal exchange. Maybe I could enjoy this. So I was looking at places to, you know, maybe be able to find something. But we did, we did discuss the fact that nothing was going to happen, and that's why we didn't go get anything. I'm not denying the fact that in order for me to enjoy anything, I need lube. I am not rescinding the fact that what he did the night he arrived, I didn't want and I tried to talk him out of it.

The following day in the message exchange that I showed you the other day that a lot of people were confused about, that message exchange was from after our trip to Vegas. These messages were from the 24th, but we were talking about what had happened. In that text exchange there are messages where I was saying he was the only one ever allowed to express lust. If I ever gave back the energy he was giving me, he never liked it. And this played out in Vegas. The night he got there, he was pressuring me into things and I didn't want it. Pushed me over, shoved his tongue in my mouth. I repeatedly rejected his attempts for sex. I did not want that. The next morning we agreed it wasn't going to happen and he was fucking terrible and we were just friends. It was something I looked at. It was something I glanced at because I was trying to reclaim, but because he promised me it was never going to happen again, and he promised me that we were just friends, it was kind of like, OK, cool, we never went in the direction of the [lube] shop. So like first thing in the morning at breakfast and when we were walking around, he agreed that we were just friends. That was something we explicitly agreed.

We went back to the hotel and I went to the pool and he stayed in the room. He denies staying in the room. He did stay in the room for like at least an hour, maybe more, because I remember sitting by the pool and thinking to myself, like, damn, he's been in there a while. He told me that he was, like, doing work or something, like he was talking to somebody on the phone or having a meeting. When he came down to the pool, we hung out by the pool and everything was fine and everything was just his friends. And then when I went back up, when we went back up so I could change to go to my appointment, he went back on his word.

He went from promising me was never going to happen and making me feel safe and making me feel like he was telling the truth and, you know, rejecting me, suggesting getting something in which maybe it could be enjoyable. And then as soon as we were alone again, he went back on that. And I was like, "We just talked about this. We just talked about this. Also, you rejected me getting like the thing [lube] it would take for this experience to not suck for me. We just said in the morning over breakfast when we were walking around." But as soon as we got to that room, that switch happened. That look in his eyes. He went from being my friend to being someone who wanted to fucking cum all over me. And I remember repeatedly trying to talk him out of it. And at that point he was saying, "Well, what's the difference? We already did it once, what's the difference? What's the difference?" He promised me it wasn't going to happen. Like, obviously it was terrible the first time, it was terrible the second time. But there was almost like this added thing of, like, when I was suggesting things, it was always a no. But whenever I was saying no, he was pushing for it. This was a recurring theme.

In that message, I said, you know, it seems only you are allowed to express any kind of lust when I do it because you've been doing it. You never like it. And that never is important. He never liked it if I gave back the energy he was giving me. Never. Any time he was giving me that energy, if I ever reciprocated, I could tell he was instantly less turned on. And that played out in Vegas. Whenever he was pushing me for it, whenever I was rejecting him, that was when he wanted it. That was when he would take what he wanted. That was when he was using his excuses and pulling things out of his ass to try to talk me into things. He kept saying, "What's the difference? What's the difference? What's the difference?" I had an appointment to get to. I didn't want what he did. If you knew we were going to do this again, could you at least have let me be a part of the conversation, let me go get the thing to actually make this OK? But instead he always did it when I didn't want it. "We're already here in Vegas, we might as well do it. We already did it once." We didn't do it once, he did it once.

I had somewhere to fucking be and he wasn't going to leave it alone. That look in his eyes, I knew I went into that room expecting to change and go get tattooed, and instead I walked into that room and one of my best friends immediately went back on his word, his word that he had been swearing for hours at this point. Only he was ever allowed to express lust. Only he was. If I ever gave lust back, he didn't like it. And that tells you everything you need to know about what happened in Vegas. But every moment he was pushing for it, I was rejecting him and trying to talk him out of it. That's when he was turned on. I wanted to reclaim what had happened, but he didn't let me. And then when we were alone, he redid what he had done the night before, all over again.

I don't care what anybody says about the part of me looking for a place where I could maybe buy lube. I don't care what anybody has to say about that. That was my trauma response. That was me trying to reclaim what he had already taken. But again, we agreed we shouldn't. We agreed we were just friends, only to have him go back on that as soon as we were alone. "Come on. What's the difference? We already did it once. We're already here in Vegas. Come on. Only quick. We'll just we'll just we'll just do it quickly, and then we'll go for your appointment." He was referring to the fact that he had already jerked off onto me once. That was what he wanted to do again.

Daniel created the perfect situation in which to take advantage of me. He said he wanted to take me on a friendship and spoil me and he promised he was a friendship only to turn that around and use it on me later. And I feel like that was part of his plan. You know, the second you tell someone, oh, like he gave money, they're like, OK, that was consent. That's not how consent works.

In regards to the sugar babying thing, the way everybody approaches it is different. I am the kind of person that only ever has one arrangement going on at a time. There are some people who have multiple sugar daddies. I only ever go one at a time, because I'm an introvert, and I dislike most people, and it's very hard for me to find people that I actually enjoy spending time with.

The Internet seems to have decided that the second you pay someone you can do whatever you want to them. That is not true because first of all, he told me he was going to give me that money as a friend so it doesn't even count. Second of all, consent can be retracted at any time, any time. And just because you consent to one thing doesn't mean you consent to another. Consent is something that you need throughout, and money does not change that. And even in this situation, the money doesn't count because he promised me he was giving it to me as a friend. So you have to take the money out of the equation, or you have to look at it in a sense of he purposefully lured me on this friend holiday and then used that against them me on.

He didn't pay me for sex. It doesn't matter that I'm a sugar baby. If we had gone and bought lube, I might have consented, and I'm not afraid to admit that. But without it, sexual encounters suck for me. Like, suck. If we had gone and bought lube, it might have been consensual the second time, but it wasn't. He took from me what I did not want to give, and I tried to reclaim that and he didn't let me. And then he took again what I did not want to give, knowing damn well I didn't want to do it and that we had just promised for hours on end that it wouldn't happen. That's not consensual. Coerced consent is not consent.

I tried to talk him out of it but eventually I just fucking gave up, whipped his dick out, and I remember vividly when he pushed me to my knees and shoved his dick in my mouth. And I remember my mouth was so dry, his dick felt like a rolled up carpet. And I can honestly tell you my mouth was so dry, I couldn't have sucked a dick even if I wanted to. But his dick was only in my mouth for about five seconds before he pulled me up onto the bed, laid his money on me that he promised was just his friend's, and then jerked off onto me. Are we forgetting that he repeatedly tried to stick his penis in me the first night? He seems to think that he's all high and mighty because he didn't want to cross that line. When it comes to, like, sex, he's acting all high and mighty that he didn't cross that line, without telling you that he was pressuring me for it. And even if you take penetration out of it, the fucker jerked off onto me twice, and both times I tried to talk him out of it.

It doesn't matter what history we had. Consent is something you need consistently. Any moment I wasn't rejecting him, he was no longer interested. He never liked it. And that tells you everything you need to know about the two times that it did happen. And that's why I was in such, like, a daze that I forgot to bring my food offering to the appointment. Because when you do batok, you need to bring food offerings for your ancestors. And I had mine and it was in the room. But because of what he did, I was in such a daze that I forgot it. I had to end up ordering pizza for my ancestors and they didn't fucking like it.

I didn't fucking want it. And I had a fucking tattoo appointment to get to. But I didn't fight him off. He came on me, wiped it off, got changed and I went and got tattooed. Night one and day two, I didn't fucking want it, and I had established that multiple times, day three for me or day two for him. After I got tattooed on night two, I had been crying and shaking and going into shock, and I was in so much pain that I think I feel like it kind of turned him off. One of my friends said he clearly dehumanizes the people he wants to have sex with and that makes it easy to ignore consent. I think him seeing me go into shock, crying and shaking, humanized me. That night nothing happened because I was in so much pain and I passed out and I just, you know, needed rest, thank fuck. The following day, we went to the art gallery. I was still in a lot of pain from the tattoo, like my entire back was on fire.

You know, I realize now that what I went through to some people is an insult. I stand by everything I have said. I just do not stand by the way I said them and the order in which I said it. Like that was all bullshit, and I realize that now, and I did it all wrong. And that has completely fucked not only my case, but every fucking survivor that I've let down, and I'm disgusted by that. But I'm going to try to just get this concise.

I sent those videos because I'm a crazy person and this is how I deal with my feelings. I sent those videos because I was genuinely distraught. In those videos I say I wish I had said no. I never know how to say no. That doesn't mean he didn't push me over and stick his tongue in my mouth. At no point has he told you that I looked at him and was like, "Yes, let's do this." Me admitting to saying I wish I had said no, I never know how to say no, that's not me admitting to consenting. I don't see how people see it that way. I feel so fucking guilty because of what I did, and I stand by that. That is not me admitting to it being consensual.

The only thing I admit here is that I feel guilty, and I wish that I had said no. In regards to the fact that he pushed me over and shoved his tongue in my mouth and I didn't fight him off. I never consented. I felt like shit. I felt guilty as hell. Like, yeah, I seem a little unhinged sending these crying videos, but I didn't admit to it being consensual, at least not in that clip.

I've now learned from their Saturday video, he's saying, "She gave me 20 while telling me it was 10." I did not give him 20 mg. The edible was 20. He bit half of it so he had 10, and then I ate the other half. So it was either 40 for me, zero for him, or, if you count the one that we shared that didn't kick in by the time he did what he did, it would have been 50 and ten.

OK, so my message history with Kayla. This part I do genuinely feel bad about because I worded that fucking terribly. Can I just say, that first video of mine was worded terribly. I'm going to get to it because I'm trying to go timeline wise. And definitely the way I worded my exchange with Kayla was not cool, and it definitely sold the wrong idea. So, like, that was an honest mistake. I didn't mean to make it sound like I had messaged her immediately after. I didn't tell her that I was assaulted, but I did tell her that I didn't want it, like repeatedly. I have always made a point to be careful, to not use the word "assault" or "rape" when talking about this, apart from that one video that I was keeping vague and I'll get to that later because of timeline stuff. So yeah, the way I worded the message exchange was all wrong and I genuinely never meant for her to get harassment. Like, that was not my intent at all, and that's fucked up. I feel like of all the people in this situation, Kayla needs to be left the fuck alone. I should have left her alone years ago and I feel terrible about that. But please everybody, not her. I did not mean at all for that part to come off like she was insulting me for being assaulted. That is not at all what I meant. My wording was awful and I apologize.

OK, so after Vegas we were still, like, in contact. We were still friends after it happened. Because, here's the thing. With my trauma, no matter what he did to me in Vegas, no matter what he pressured me into, no matter what I tried to talk him out of, he was, at the end of the day, still one of my closest friends. What he did was fucked up, but I still cared about him as a person. So I was trying to leave her out of it. But then, when I found out that all of the dirt had come to light, I needed her to know that I didn't want it. I had not wanted it. And me crying and saying I wish I had said no, I never know how to say no, that is not me admitting to it being consensual. He pushed me over and stuck his tongue in my mouth. I was halfway through a sentence. A lot of people seem to think that me not saying no was me giving consent and that is not true. A lot of people seem to think that me saying, "I could do that," halfway through a sentence is consent, but that is not true. "Could" as a "maybe", "could" as a "possibly." That is not me admitting to it being consensual, but I understand that for some people what I went through was an insult to call traumatic.

Anyway, I'm going to try to get back on track. Where the fuck are we? Right, the crying videos. OK, so our last day hanging out was the 22nd. That message exchange that people seem to think was from when we were in Vegas was from the 24th. Everything officially ended on the 28th. I ruminated for a couple of days and then my whiny ass made those crying videos.

Because there was like three years of history and I needed to at least get my thoughts out and have some kind of like a final conclusion. I know people think this is weird, but this is how I work. The one I sent to Kayla was way shorter. I apologized for hurting her. Of course I felt guilty, I felt terrible, but it doesn't mean I consented to it. I didn't want it and I told her that in that video. I didn't want it, I didn't enjoy it, I regretted it. I wished it had never happened. I do not see how that is me admitting to being consensual. So I made my fucking crying videos. I held onto them for, like, a week, because I was debating whether or not to be a crazy person and actually send the links. But I just needed to apologize to her because I felt fucking terrible. And I needed to get my final thoughts out to him because I felt fucking used and violated and terrible. And I understand people are going to think this is insane, but this is how I deal with things.

OK, so the reason I did not show her message, the one saying I understand you feeling guilty, blah, blah, blah. I didn't show that message because I didn't want to show her saying, "I'm trying to hold on to whatever pieces of my life I have left," because I didn't want to out that because it's kind of sad. But I fucking outed everything else, so I don't know what the fuck I was thinking of. I, yeah, looking back on it, the way I piece that video together, that was just not it. That was just not fucking it. And I hate the hurt that it has caused because that was the complete opposite of what I wanted, the complete fucking opposite of what I had wanted. Me crying in this video to Kayla is not me rescinding the fact that I was pressured into shit.

Daniel said, "In regards to the fact that because I am bisexual and in a hetero relationship with Kayla, she has told me it's OK for me to seek sexual …." He was the one that brought that up. He was the one that told me, because when he was being so fucking pushy I was like, "You are in a relationship, you are in a monogamous relationship." And he told me, "You know, Kayla told me because I'm bi, she said I'm allowed to explore. I'm allowed to explore with men and non-binary people." I looked him dead in the eyes and I said, "Daniel, you know damn well Kayla would not consider this [circles her hand around her feminine face] non-binary. You know damn well she would not approve of you experimenting with this [waves her hands up and down her body]." He was the one that tried using that excuse. I was the one that talked him down from it. This part is complete bullshit. I didn't know she gave him permission to do that until he told me and was trying to use it. This is bullshit.

There are some people out there who have seen Part One, seen Part Two, seen Daniel's video, seen my apology and seen the interview—and they understand and are still believing me. I'm so fucking grateful for that, but I also understand everybody that thinks I'm a fucking lying piece of trash. But I'm going to get back. I'm going to get back to this. This is taking too long.

May 15 was the last time anybody was contacted. June 19 was the day that video, "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent, and Assault," went up. That's over an entire month later. Me saying "seven weeks later," I've realized now, was bad wording, and I admit that. Again, I stand by my trauma; I do not stand by my behavior. He showed the money that he spent. I'm not denying he bought me stuff. I said, "I wish I could take it all back. I wish I could take it all fucking back. It was not worth losing what we had." Me saying "I could take it all back" is not me admitting to consenting. When I say "it was not worth losing what we had," I meant as friends, not more than that. I'm not afraid to admit that he was a very, very dear friend to me.

There was a lot of things that we spoke about that I hadn't shared with anybody else, and that was part of why him taking advantage of me and pressuring me into things, knowing my entire history, all of my trauma and that I had PTSD, that's part of why this fucked me up so much. Again, me saying "I wish I had said no" is not me saying "I wish I hadn't said yes." If in this crying video I was sobbing and saying "I wish I wish I hadn't said yes, I wish I hadn't said yes," it would be different. But instead all I have said is "I wish I had said no." That is not me admitting to it being consensual. Consent is something you need consistently. If it's not an enthusiastic yes, it's a no. Just because I didn't fight, just because I didn't say no, it doesn't mean that I said yes. It does not mean that I consented, and this is something that a lot of people are just missing.

It doesn't matter the history we had. What matters was the two moments I'm talking about: The night he pressured me into things I didn't want, and the day he pressured me into things that I didn't want. The fluff around it is not important, technically.

OK, I understand now that how much I reached out to Kayla was weird and fucked up and I should have left her alone. It was not right and I understand that and I apologize. And the way that I worded things in that first video, oh my God.

I don't think I've gotten to my apologies yet in this video. So Kayla, I am genuinely so fucking sorry for the amount of hurt that there has been in this entire thing. for years. Genuinely, I was fighting for you and then afterwards I thought I was still fighting for you, but I realized I should have just pissed off and left you alone. And I apologize for that. So yes, I was apologizing and I was reaching out and I shouldn't have done it, but I have not once admitted to consenting to what he did.

OK, before this starts, I would like to reiterate the fact that this video, "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent, and Assault", was a general conversation video that I just wanted to talk to, you know, my community about. This exact clip he is talking about here. I never once said was about my personal experience. This segment of the video was me talking about situations in general, and that's what I need people to understand. In that video, "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent, and Assault," only a smidgen of it was me giving my personal experience. The rest of the video was just in general. That's why it's called "A Conversation About Manipulation, Consent, and Assault". It wasn't called "What Happened to Me." It's different. The scenario I was talking about is not what happened between me and Daniel. It was me talking in general, and he was assuming I was talking about him. There are parts in the video where I was sharing a personal experience, but this was the part where I was just talking in general. So him using this part is irrelevant because I wasn't talking about him at this time.

OK. I want to address my use of the word assault in this video. I would like to again reiterate the fact that I never said this video was about Daniel, and I had zero intention on anybody knowing that the video was about Daniel, because there wasn't a single person following me that knew I had gone to Vegas with Daniel. There was literally like two people in my life who knew I was going on that trip with a friend. I genuinely did not think he was going to see this or watch this. I did not think anybody who clicked on this would think about him at all, whatsoever. If you read the comments from, like, before this blew up from years ago, there is not a single person in the comments who thinks it's about anybody. Every discussion was just people talking about their own experiences or just things in general. I had zero intention on this being about Daniel publicly in any way shape or form.

It was, like, first thing in the morning I just got out of the shower. Of course, my thoughts are not completely coherent and not thought through. I didn't run it by a lawyer, I didn't run it by anyone. It was just a conversation. Obviously, looking back on it now, I would not use the word assault, which was why in video number one, I never said Daniel assaulted me and I never said Daniel raped me. In that segment of the video. I was not talking about him, I was talking in general.

And then fast-forward to the other week when I woke up one day and had a great idea to come forward because I thought I was doing a good thing. I am not retracting my statement that Daniel Greene pressured me into things that I did not want, that we had agreed beforehand would not happen, while he was pretty much sober. He was either like sober or sober with a little edible in his stomach that had not yet kicked in. You can either say Naomi was on 40 and he was sober, or you could say Naomi was on 50 and he was on ten. It just entirely depends on whether or not you count the edible we shared when he arrived.

In that first video, I realize now it was worded and put together terribly. If I was going to tell you anything, I should have told you everything from the get-go in chronological order, and I realize now that the way I did it was so fucked up and the way I have behaved since then is also fucked up. I stand by my trauma; I do not stand by my behavior. I genuinely did not think that I was accusing him of rape. Like, genuinely. I specifically only used the word "pressure" to describe what he did to me. I never at any point said Daniel Greene raped me. I never at any point said Daniel Greene assaulted me. In the video that I made about Daniel Greene, what I said was that he pressured me into things that I did not want. What I said was that I repeatedly tried to talk him out of it. I never said in that video that I told him to stop. I never said that I told him no. I never said that I fought him off.

I thought that was the thing I was supposed to do, but I realized that from the way I described it, the way I made that video, the way that I was recounting the events, the way that I was crying and sobbing. I want to let you know that all of those tears were real, all of them were real, that panic attack was real. I cannot fake that. But I am not admitting to falsely accusing him. I genuinely did not mean to do that in that video. And then when I started to get all the outpour of messages and when I started to see what people were saying to him, I realized that I had said it wrong and that everybody was taking it as a rape accusation. And while I stand by trying to clear the air, I do not stand by the way that I did it, because I that that was not the way to do it.

And so I threw together that manic-ass Part Two to try to give you a little bit more insight into, you know, the history and what had happened. But it got flagged by YouTube and got taken down. A lot of people seem to think I took those videos down out of, like, shame or regret. I didn't, I didn't. Part Two got flagged by YouTube [it was removed for violating YouTube's Terms and Conditions for sexually explicit content]. I took down Part One because without Part Two, Part One looks like I'm accusing him of rape, and I didn't mean that. You know, like, if Part Two was still up, I would have left Part One up. But because Part Two got taken down, I needed to take down Part One because people were getting the wrong message from it.

And I'm not blaming other people. The way I worded it and said it and the way I shared that story was fucking ... I didn't mean for it to come off that way. Like genuinely. There were some people who noticed that I never said that he raped me. Like there are some people who did notice that I wasn't accusing him of raping me in that video, but most people took it that way.

Also, can I just say I did not mean for anybody to lose their livelihood when I posted that video. In that video, I said I do not want this to blow up, and I meant that. I thought it was going to be some, like, under-the-radar, you know .... Like that Tumblr post didn't blow up, but I guess it wasn't on YouTube. I didn't mean for it to blow up. I did not mean for him to be harassed and given death threats like as soon as day one. I did not mean for people to go after Kayla and harass her. I hate where this has gone and it is not at all where I intended for it to go. It breaks my heart that that is now being taken as a rape accusation, and that now it's harder for people to come forward about the things that they've been through.

I genuinely did not mean for that video to be a rape accusation. It wasn't for accusing him of raping me. That wasn't the point of the video and I did it all wrong. So I made Part Two to try to explain to people that it wasn't as rapey as they thought it had been. But then that just started a whole new shit show. I thought, I genuinely thought that people were going to be far more critical of me from day one. I didn't expect people to rally behind me as quickly as they did. I did not expect that video to blow up. I did not expect people to turn against him. I knew he had a very loyal fan base. I thought they were going to be critical of me from day one, and instead I wasn't on the Internet that day because I was fully convinced that I was going to be getting hate all day. And then one of my friends was like, "Dude, have you seen?" and then they informed me that hundreds of people were leaving his discord. Hundreds, if not thousands of people were calling him a rapist. I didn't want that to happen. I didn't want that to happen. I didn't mean that to happen. I genuinely didn't think that I was accusing him of rape. But I realized the way I did it, the way I said it, it was all wrong.

When I came forward, I knew that every last sordid detail about my life would be aired to the public. Daniel seems to think that I thought he didn't have those videos anymore. He is incorrect. I knew he had everything. I knew he had our messages, my letters, my songs, the videos. I knew he had everything. So please think about it logically. It makes no sense for me to falsely accuse somebody who I know has everything. It makes no logical sense. I stand to gain nothing from falsely accusing a man who I know can publicly destroy me. I knew he had everything. I sent him everything. I know people hold on to things. And the fact that he had sent me a Cease and Desist and the fact that his lawyer had told me they were in possession of our messages made it very clear to me that they were in possession of our messages. I did not come forward thinking he had nothing.

I came forward knowing he had everything, and yet I still did it because I thought I was doing a good thing. I thought I was protecting people from getting hurt, and instead I just hurt thousands of people because I fucking worded that first video so wrong. I did not mean to accuse him of rape. I did not mean for that video to become a blown up rape accusation. If I had been accusing him of rape, I would have put that in the title and I would have given you trigger warnings. OK, this is another thing that pisses me off about myself. The fact that I didn't give trigger warnings on that video horrifies me. I forced thousands of survivors to relive their trauma without giving them a heads up, and I think that was one of the major things I did wrong because I forced people to live through their trauma. And so it was so easy to not notice me only refer to it as "pressure." I realize now that the way I said it was terrible. The way I structure that video was terrible. The way I triggered the fuck out of people without giving them a heads up was terrible.

And that was part of why I released Part Two so quickly. I realized that Part One was being taken wrong, and I wanted to explain that. I wanted to show more of what had happened in the context. I did not mean for it to be a rape accusation. I didn't. I didn't use that word. I am so fucking sorry. I am so sorry. I thought it was protecting people and now because it wasn't rape, which I never said that it was, now I am being called a false accuser. There are some people out there who I have seen saying, "I did not see Naomi accuse him of rape," but I understand that most people saw it that way.

And I just kept making it worse and all I do is keep making it worse. I am so sorry to Kayla for all of this shit that I've put you through and I'm sorry for Daniel. I didn't mean to accuse you of rape. I was just talking about how you pressured me into things that I didn't want. I specifically never said that Daniel raped me. I do not take the word rape lightly. In fact, normally when I talk about it, I call it the "R word". I would never falsely accuse somebody of rape. Never, trust me, False accusers, I hate false accusers. So the fact that this is how this has gone is devastating to me. I never meant to accuse him of rape. I fucking didn't. I feel fucking terrible that that was a take away—because of the survivors. The fact that I have now made it more difficult for people to be believed when they come forward is devastating to me. That was the last thing that I wanted, the last thing I would ever want. Me coming forward was me attempting to have people believe more, because at that time, at least, I believed it wasn't just me; it was me and somebody else. But again, I'm not accusing him of rape. I never did. I never did. But I understand that that's how that video was taken.

My heart breaks for the survivors that I have let down. Trust me, I was reading your comments, I was reading your comments, and my heart was breaking and it still is. The worst part out of all of this for me is that I have hurt survivors. I went into this knowing that all of my dirty laundry would be aired; I knew that it would be. I was airing my own dirty laundry before Daniel did. I knew he had the messages. I knew he had the texts. I knew he had the photos. I knew he had the videos. I knew he had everything. And yet I still came forward, because I thought I was helping people. Please keep that in mind. I stand to gain nothing from falsely accusing a man who I know can and will destroy me. I came forward.

I said that he pressured me into things that I didn't want. I personally did not call him a rapist. I personally did not say that he raped me. I thought his fans would be more critical of me. I thought they would not jump ship as quickly as they did. I did not mean for everything to explode the way that it did. And I'm so sorry that that is what happened. I am sorry to every single sexual assault survivor that I let down from doing this. It was not my intent. I did not mean to accuse him of rape. I did not mean to do that, I promise you. I thought I was choosing my words well. I thought that sticking to the word "pressure" was the right thing to do. But I realize now that I should have specifically said I'm not accusing him of raping me. I thought I was being smart with my words, and clearly I was not. Oh my God.

I want to summarize some things. One, I'm not admitting to falsely accusing Daniel Greene of rape. I never meant to do that, and I'm so fucking sorry that that was how it went. Two, I am not retracting my statement that Daniel Greene pressured me into things that I did not want and we had previously discussed and agreed would not happen. Three, yes, there was history between us, but having prior history with somebody does not equate to consent in the present or in the future. Four, me wanting to buy lube was me trying to reclaim. Yes, I looked up a sex store. Yes, I wanted to go buy some things. He had already taken advantage of me, talked me into things that I didn't want, and come all over me when I never fucking wanted it to begin with. I had a handful of hours left to try to reclaim what had happened, but I wasn't allowed to because if I ever wanted it, he didn't. Five, the wording of that video was fucking terrible. Fucking terrible. I should have told you everything in chronological order with every last sort of detail if I was going to tell you anything at all. And I realized that and I'm so fucking sorry with the way that was worded and understood and taken and, like, I should have worded it better and I feel so fucking terrible that I didn't. His behavior was not OK, but neither has my behavior been over the last week. I thought I wasn't accusing him of rape in that first video, but clearly that's how it was taken. I thought I was clearing the air in the second video, but I just made things worse. And then I posted an apology video and then 24 hours later, I posted an interview.

I know that I'm behaving manic, I know it. And I know that there are many, many, many people speculating that I'm having a manic episode. I don't want to blame mental health, but because people are already throwing the words out there, I thought I would let you know what it is that I am diagnosed with. I am diagnosed Bipolar I, and I am seeing my psychiatrist again. Over the last two weeks I have barely eaten, I have barely slept, and I have been in this constant state of feeling wired. So for all of you that are calling me fucking unwell and psychotic and going through something, you are right. Posting and taking down and posting and taking down and making and filming and editing and posting and taking down—it is unhinged, unwell behavior and I know that, and I am seeking help.

I thought that the more I released, the more I would explain, and I was fucking wrong. I am not posting this video to try to explain myself to the people who already hate me. I am posting this video because there are a handful of people out there who understand and I'm not leaving them with a vague bullshit three minute apology that makes it seem like I'm admitting to falsely accusing. No, I never said that. I never said that in that apology. This video is for the few people who fucking understand the nuance of this shit. It's for the few people who want at least a few questions answered before I fuck off and disappear.

I thought that video was just going to start like a discussion about consent and like pressuring people into things, but instead it came off like a fucking rape accusation and everybody was calling him a rapist. I never said that he raped me. Please! I can't tell you to watch that video because I took it down, but, like, if you watch it from start to finish, I never said Daniel Greene raped me. All I ever said was that Daniel Greene pressured me into things, but I know for every survivor that I just triggered, I understand that hearing me describe what he did sounded like rape.

There's nothing I can do, there's nothing I can do to make it better. I do not regret trying to come forward for the right reasons. I do not regret that, but I thought I was doing the right thing. For those of you that have managed to watch this entire thing, I thank you. I thought I was doing a good thing and instead all I have done is hurt people and all I did was hurt survivors of sexual violence. And that is the part that breaks me. That is the part that breaks me the most.

I want to apologize to every single one of Daniel's fans and friends who jumped ship immediately. People were crying, people were crying! I didn't mean for it to explode the way that I that it did. I promise you. I promise you. And no matter what history he and I had, he promised me nothing was going to happen. Even if, even if, he genuinely thinks that I was sober, I still tried to talk him out of it. He still pushed me over and shoved his tongue in my mouth. He still tried to stick his penis in me, repeatedly, and I still pushed his penis away, repeatedly. Even if he thought I was sober, all of that is garbage behavior on his part, especially because he knew every last detail of my previous trauma. Those tears, that panic attack, were completely real. I was not faking that. And I understand that to some people what he did to me in Vegas is insulting, but to me it was incredibly fucking real.

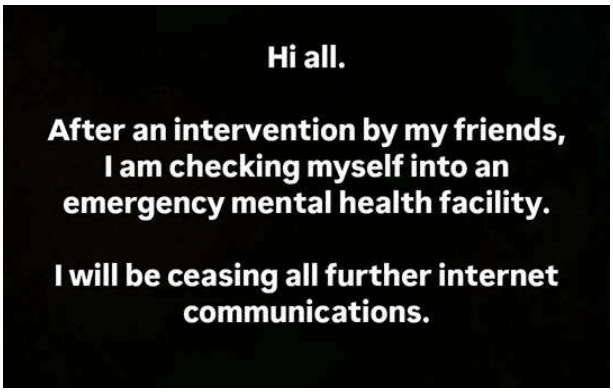
And there are a handful of people out there who are sexual assault survivors who feel seen by this entire story from me, who have been sending me messages saying, “I still believe you. I've seen every video, I have seen his video, and I still stand behind you that what he did was wrong.” I am so thankful for those people. I am so thankful for the people who are looking at this from a neutral lens. I hope I have answered some questions in this video and I hope I have made it very clear to survivors of sexual assault that I did not mean to hurt you, I did not want to hurt you. That is the last thing I have ever wanted, and the fact that it is now harder for people to come forward devastates the shit out of me. I stand behind standing up for yourself. I stand behind refusing to be silenced. I stand behind coming forward because you genuinely think that you're going to be helping other people.

What I do not stand behind is the way I handled it over the last two weeks and how fucking manic I have been making videos, posting videos, making, taking them down, editing ... this is now apology video #13. I am sorry to every single person that I have hurt in this. It was not my intention. I am so sorry.

Naomi announces she is going offline and entering an "emergency mental health facility," and disappears from view.

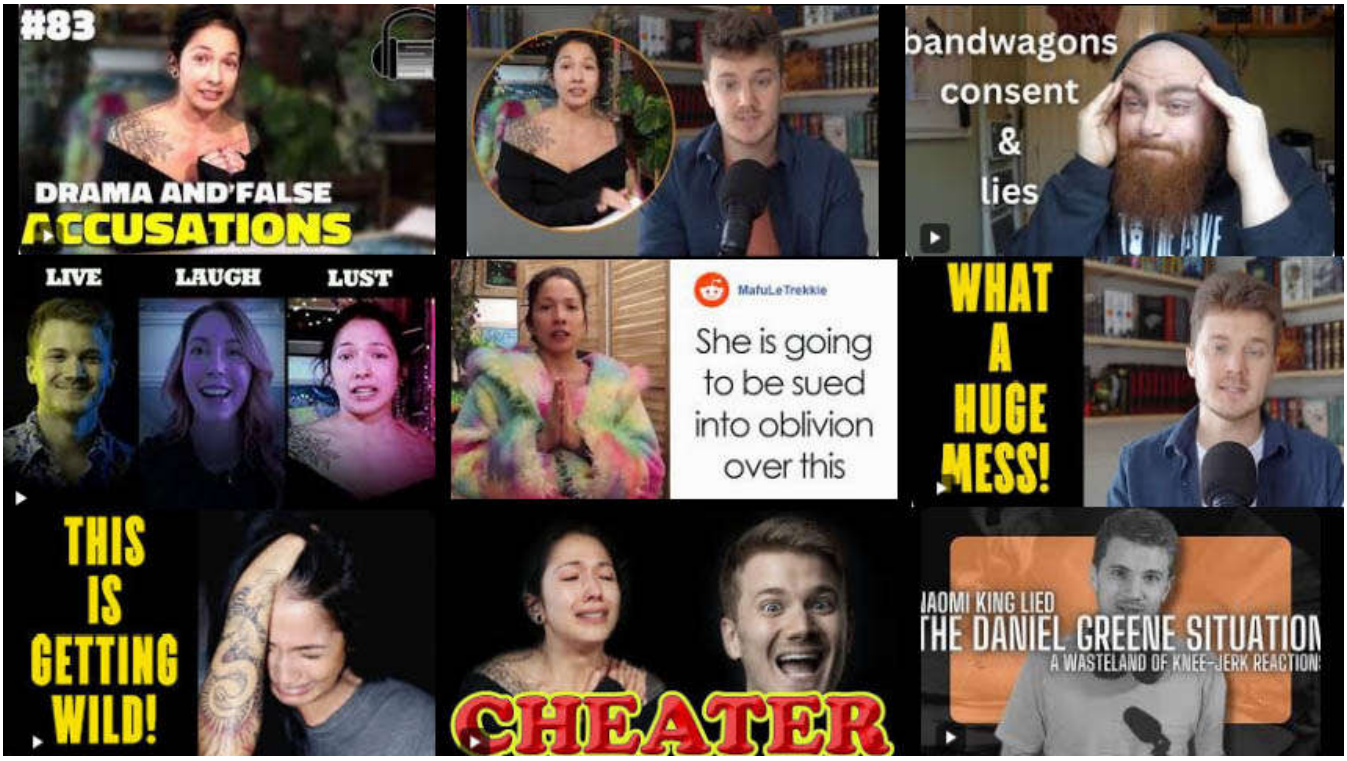
February 24, Naomi posted on her social media accounts:



Hi all.
After an intervention by my friends, I am checking myself into an emergency mental health facility.
I will be ceasing all further internet communications.

Naomi closed her social media accounts and ended her 15-year YouTube career.

Examples of YouTube videos about the Naomi King vs. Daniel Greene saga.



The now PRIVATE part 1 video from NAOMI KING
BOOK TUBE, NAOMI KING AND DANIEL GREENE
The since DELETED part 2 video from NAOMI KING
ASSAULT ALLEGATIONS
INNOCENT
This is bad!
Word salad, Omissions & Re-enactment
Deception
DELETED LETTER?!
She Cost Millions
Omg! part 2
was this consenual?
FANTASY NEWS
DANIEL GREENE VS NAOMI KING
DATING GONE WRONG
EXPOSED
INNOCENT UNTIL PROVEN GUILTY
You both are vile, despicable human beings to do this to another person. Over years. Im revolted by the mere sight of you.
WHY THESE WORDS?
CRAZED OBSESSED LIAR
VIDEO Gone!
Daniel Greene Situation Part 2
Silence?
Consent!?
NAOMI KING'S NEW ALLEGATION
SURELY THIS ONE WILL BE TRUE!
You both are vile, despicable human beings to do this to another person. Over years. Im revolted by the mere sight of you.
THIS IS AWFUL

Not only on YouTube, but also in chat rooms will the Naomi vs. Daniel saga long be remembered: Reddit alone has archived enough discussions about them to fill a book.

Examples of thoughtful Reddit threads about the Naomi King vs. Daniel Greene saga.

> JimmyRecard: Naomi King has deleted her YouTube channel. It looks like the end of the saga, at least for now, until we hear about any court proceedings. I hope she gets the help she needs. I don't know what happened, and I am not excluding the possibility that Daniel Greene did assault her, but the way she has handled this seems to me to be borderline self-harm. Springboks2019: What a shit show this was (so far) lol.
>
> NippleOfOdin: Wishing the best for Daniel's fiancée and absolutely nobody else involved in this.
>
> ItIsTheLord: I hope Naomi gets help. But I also hope Daniel moves forward with a defamation case. I have no doubt Naomi has some mental health problems and she deserves treatment for them, but false accusations like this are so unbelievably harmful to both the falsely accused and real victims of sexual assault. Her mental health plight can't be enough of a reason to not pursue any legal action. This, of course, is up to Daniel himself but considering the dude lost 30,000 subscribers, all of his booktuber friends turned on him, some people still believing he assaulted Naomi, I just don't think he should let that go. He's a piece of shit for cheating on his partner but I don't think he's a rapist. From the outside looking in, I hate seeing all those "friends" of his immediately making statements or videos and then gaining subscribers for that. After their "apologies" they've lost a lot less than they gained. All in the name of making themselves look good. Virtue signaling whilst your friend is catching the heat is such a shitty thing to do and it's a shame they all condemned him right off the bat. They should have just stayed quiet and waited for his side to come out. Horrible situation that will likely happen again once enough time has passed.

Creature_Coomer: The fact that his own friends turned on him quickly made people believe that Naomi's sexual assault claims were even more valid. It doesn't really help that he's admitted to using Tindr while visiting his dad (when "Madison" accused him of sexual assault) although we don't know if that's while he was with his fiancée Kayla or not. It doesn't help that he seemed to go along with the "being bisexual means I can fuck non-women" logic, although both Naomi and Daniel both claim that the other said it! The fact that they still fucked means they both thought it was legit, so it doesn't really matter who said it first.

KrazedKarl: She had that channel for like 15 years. Fucking OOF!

InterstellerReptile: My guess is she'll turn it back on eventually. If she checked into a mental health hospital then odds are they told her to shut it down to help avoid the harassment for now.

Jnighy: The fact that she still says she doesn't exclude the possibility Daniel assaulted her says a lot of the harm she caused with this false accusation. You expect YTDrama to have any nuance? She has to give herself some leeway so her original dogpiling seems somewhat justified. Naomi has lied and manipulated the audience, provably, multiple times and yet we get the "Daniel is a piece of shit and potential assaulter" additions. Meanwhile, had Naomi not self-reported on her own videos, Daniel never would have given any grace or doubt in his favor. I mean, we still see it here, with the claims that 'you can't trust a cheater'. What about you can't trust someone who openly edited footage and manipulates her audience? Mama didn't raise no sucker, you know the phrase. Fool me once, shame on you. Naomi fooled everyone here, multiple times. I'm not going to keep giving a manipulative abuser any more doubt. At this point, she shat in her own bed, and for her claims to hold any water, they will have to be proven in a court of law. I am all for empowering victims and defending them during their accusation phase, but we have to draw the line in the sand or otherwise you're just giving people a platform to abuse, an excuse to get away with it, and permanently damaging the reputation of all sexual assaulted victims. Everyone can make comments about how they hate Daniel for cheating, but please stop comparing that action as equal to Naomi's actions. It's not the same.

TrashRacoon42: I admit I was fooled, and I don't blame anyone else for being fooled. There's nothing bad or wrong about that at all. Nobody is a bad person for believing Naomi initially because she was convincing and it's just human decency to want to support someone who seemed to have had the worst things a person shouldn't have experience happen to them. I'm 100% supporting victims and giving them a voice and support when they come forward. But what Naomi did was damaging, and she shouldn't have a platform. I don't give a damn what Daniel did or didn't do. It is irrelevant. The point of this case was: she made a false allegation toward another person potentially ruining his mental health and reputation. Cheating is bad, but it's small potatoes compared to a false sexual assault allegation. If it was just "he cheated" that would be one thing but not "he is a rapist."

One-Last-Hoorah: You put it perfectly. I agree with you completely. This does not change the stance we have with supporting victims, but cheating commentary should be a different thread all together! This is about false allegations which are so damaging to so many people, not just the parties involved. Daniel being a fuckboy is irrelevant to this thing that Naomi did.

Creature_Coomer: They're both cheaters! It doesn't mean that Naomi isn't a manipulative liar. Nobody forced Daniel to fly to Vegas for sex and "spoiling a friend." Nobody is saying they're the same amount of bad!

Orfelia33: You should read some of the comments on this post and the others, there are definitely people saying that, and they aren't few.

Professional_Chest70: It's because whether it's false is really unclear. Naomi says she's not accusing Daniel of sexual assault, then directly afterward says she didn't give consent. She says she didn't say no or fight him off, then says she did say "I'm not having sex without lube, and I was pushing him away." She claims it wasn't assault and that she's sorry, then says it was a traumatizing event. Naomi is clearly very unwell mentally, to the point that she doesn't really know what she's saying and is unable to follow a logical train of thought. In order to know what happened, we'd have to wait for Naomi to coherently tell her side after receiving the help she needs.

Jnighy: If nothing is adding up, he is innocent. That's how it works. All we've seen is an accusation from a mentally unstable person without any evidence. Innocent until proven guilty also applies to sexual assault. And those false accusations are a travesty to the falsely accused and to real victims.

Templar4522: The guy had an affair with an unstable person, and allegedly also lying to her about how he'd break up with his partner to be with her. It might not be assault, but I still look down on the guy, and wouldn't put it past him. If you're selfish enough to lie and cheat, hurting two people to get laid, who's to say he won't do worse? His videos also feel off, somehow. I wouldn't be surprised if he's an habitual manipulator. That's the vibe I get from him now. Sure, her accusations damaged him and his reputation. But what changed my mind about him to the point I wouldn't disregard that 1% chance that in fact he assaulted her, are the context he explained and how he explained it. We'll see what else transpires after he sues her.

Vforvolta: It depends to what extent Naomi is a conscious manipulator or someone entirely unstable and in desperate need of help. I feel like if the former is more true than the latter, then she should take up acting because at the very least that initial video seemed like someone who absolutely believed in what she was saying.

Desertchick208: She was having a BPD episode. That's why it felt real. But people with borderline personality disorder are extremely erratic in their emotions and also in their memories.

ZzzPessimist: Staying off the internet for some time might be all the help she needs.

Natural_Section_7571: I watched her video. At first my heart broke. By the end, I thought, this girl is a nut case.

Afireinside1991: Same here.

Dry-Pin-3551: I think enough has been said about Naomi's false allegations hurting actual sexual assault survivors and irreplaceably damaging Daniel's reputation. It's also unfortunate that all the cheating and sexual stuff was brought from Daniel's past. It makes me uncomfortable knowing it.

Tough_Bell463: There are enough red flags about Daniel; however, Naomi killed any credibility she could've had the moment she released that apology. Personally I hope he is 100% innocent so that there aren't any real victims.

Vincentkun: Point is, she had no evidence. So it was her word against his, so she has to be truthful. Clearly she wasn't. She had no credibility left by her last video. so only evidence would clear the air. And the fact that people qualify it with "I don't discard that he did it" is exactly why he should sue her.

David-Cassette-alt: Not any real victims? Are you kidding? Imagine the stress and trauma of being falsely accused of sexual assault by a deranged stalker. Daniel is a victim. People seriously need to stop downplaying the severity of false accusations.

ResearchNervous992: Been out of the loop, can someone give a summary?

JimmyRecard: Daniel Greene is the biggest book-based YouTuber (booktuber). Naomi King is an artist, writer, and actor. She released a vague video not naming Daniel, but claiming that if somebody leads you to believe that he may pursue a serious committed relationship with you, and you have sex under those terms, and then he backs out of the relationship, that should be considered sexual assault. Daniel Greene sent her a cease-and-desist letter because despite not being named, he knew she was talking about him.

Naomi, two years later, released a video claiming Daniel Greene sexually assaulted her during a 'just friends' trip to Vegas, and that by sending the cease-and-desist letter he was admitting it. The initial response was positive and supporting to Naomi, and Daniel was cancelled.

But people had questions. To address those questions, Naomi released a second video. In it, she revealed facts that changed most people's perception of the alleged sexual assault from it being sexual violence to the situation being a consensual affair which turned ugly when Daniel decided to stay with his then girlfriend, now fiancée. Among those facts were: failing to make it clear that Naomi persisted in contacting Daniel and his girlfriend after being told to stop; that Naomi filmed and sent videos to both Daniel and his girlfriend; that Naomi was a sugar baby and was paid for her companionship; that Daniel and Naomi had a previous history and were not always just friends; that Naomi continued to seek a relationship with Daniel after being allegedly assaulted; that Naomi was not clear in communicating her consent and had never said 'no' or 'stop'; and that she sent messages after the event suggesting that the event was consensual. None of those prove that Naomi wasn't assaulted, but changed the narrative from a relatively clear cut sexual assault case to a 'woman scorned' situation where Naomi can't be trusted to disclose material facts and is willing to massage the facts to serve her purpose.

These points resulted in the public opinion reversing, with Daniel being uncancelled, and Naomi now being perceived as being a false accuser. She kept persisting that she was using her personal definition of consent while accusing Daniel (that backing out of a relationship after sex is sexual assault), but she also apologized to everyone, including Daniel, which was seen as admission that her accusation was false. Meanwhile, through all this, Daniel lawyered up and used the information Naomi released to paint the narrative that this was a consensual affair that he regretted, and once he pulled away, Naomi went scorched earth. While she still has some supporters, the public sentiment largely agreed with Daniel's version of events. He also announced he is suing Naomi.

Since then, Naomi has been uploading and later deleting video after video, digging herself in deeper and deeper, airing a set of allegations from an anonymous accuser who most people thought wasn't credible, and burning any goodwill Naomi had left. Finally she decided to delete her channel.

Austenaaaaa: I appreciate that you're mostly presenting all this in a neutral and descriptive way, but I just wanted to address this:

"She kept persisting that she was using her personal definition of consent while accusing Daniel (backing out of a relationship after sex is sexual assault)" Naomi specifically rejects this interpretation. Her persistent claim has been that she was pressured into acts that she neither wanted nor consented to in the moment. The misunderstanding seems to come from the way he presented a clip from Naomi's in his second response video, which was done misleadingly at best.

JimmyRecard: From my reading of the situation, the whole issue stems from the fact that Naomi was working with a personal definition of consent, which could be changed after the act itself. If you were to accept her framing, then it was assault since Daniel didn't end up getting into a relationship with Naomi. However, most people don't operate on this malleable definition of consent, so they perceived her accusation as false. After they did so, and especially after sexual assault survivors rejected Naomi's definition, she went back and forth claiming that she was not sexually abused but that it wasn't consensual, which is an oxymoron; either there was no consent and you were assaulted or there was and you weren't assaulted. I do believe that all this time Naomi was speaking her emotional truth; that she invested into Daniel emotionally and expected more, and when he didn't leave Kayla, she felt betrayed, cheated, and traumatized. She didn't want to be a side chick, and she thought that sexual intimacy would bring her closer to Daniel, and that was the context of the consent. It was a shitty relationship, and Daniel is a shitty partner who likely took advantage of Naomi being emotionally vulnerable. However, sexual assault has a specific meaning, and you can't be fast and loose when accusing somebody of illegality. Your model of consent must align with the wider understanding of consent because when you reach for trial by public opinion, you're operating on the public's model of consent.

Austenaaaaa: I believe Naomi has been speaking her emotional truth, and I believe her truth is that she was assaulted or, at least, that she was pressured or coerced into sex she didn't want in the moment and wasn't consenting to in the moment and had complicated feelings about due to her own history and her history with Daniel. I don't know whether assault occurred, but what she has described—by my standards, in the jurisdiction I live in, and without inferring they're shaping their language based on a private definition they've given no indication they're applying to this case (but indications to the contrary)— would seem to meet that standard.

Fancy_Table: In her initial video (before she named Daniel) she said that when a person leads you on and then does not pursue a relationship with you, that is sexual assault. That is shitty behavior, but most people would not call that sexual assault, which centers more on the absence of consent.

Angrykebler4: Man, can you imagine the shit-storm if Daniel had "spoken his emotional truth"?

Vincentkun: He must sue. If not for the money but for all sexual assault victims who will be inevitably harmed by this false allegation. People will be less willing to believe victims after this, specially within the community. She lied even in her latest video, and it's clear she did not get the response she wanted. There are only two victims here: Daniel and his fiancée Kayla.

Ttheflyingyon: What a piece of dogshit Naomi is.

LurpiusNerpius890: Yeah, she needs help.

JimJonesdrinkkoolaid: In my opinion, far too many people have defended Naomi by talking about her mental health. I feel like she's getting that grace because she's a woman. I don't think a male would get that defence.

Fringey123321: Her bullshit not only hurts the people directly involved, it hurts the people that actually need to be believed. Naomi shouldn't have a platform, I really hope she gets help, and I hope it works.

Lurkeyturkey113: I don't really think she had much of a YouTube career honestly. Yes there's videos but not really of the popularity to be significant income. She was also a tattoo artist and was pretty good but seemed to work on that sporadically. She seems to be the kind of person who jumped from passion to passion without fully settling into anything as a real career. I'd followed her in the past but stopped a few years ago because the overtly sexual content was annoying, but it makes sense now that the real income came from sex work. If anything this whole saga may have nuked that, but that's probably a good thing as it's objectively not good for mental health.

Klutzy-Sun-6648: She sounded like she has borderline personality disorder, bipolar disorder or a narcissistic personality disorder. Once she said that she was a sex worker, went to Vegas together (sharing a room/bed), stayed multiple nights with him, and she sleeps naked next to people all the time—it didn't add up, showed a lack of boundaries and attention-seeking behavior. People who willingly become sex workers tend to be attention seeking (yes, sex workers can be raped but they tend to go to the police immediately, which she didn't do). The fact she sleeps naked around other people reminds me of a girl I used to know who would kiss girls to get attention. Then she reenacted it especially what he said—it was so disgusting and not at all how someone who was sexually abused would behave, but someone who wants attention and bragging how hot she is compared to the girlfriend. Then she sends this to the girlfriend! It's sick. She is twisting the knife into the girlfriend instead of informing or warning her. Cheating is emotional abuse. What the girlfriend went through is awful and the guy was a complete asshole to his girlfriend. I'm glad he worked on himself and built up the relationship to the point they are marrying each other. That is great.

But to have this vindictive leech of a woman come in to drag them down is horrible. I can't imagine going through that especially since it would affect them socially, affect their relationship, and affect their business. I'm glad they stuck it out and stayed strong.

Carwaii: Did anyone else have an immediate and visceral reaction to the way Naomi spoke? Every cell in my body screamed bullshit! This woman really grossed me out with her fake sobbing and her way of speaking in general. Who is tuning in to her videos? Who are her fans?? I'm becoming more interested in the psychology of her followers than in her.

El_Draque: She speaks like a woman I know who is the biggest phony. Theatrical speech gives away the insincerity of it all.

Accelerated_Dragons: I agree. I am hesitant to assess people's truthfulness based on their speaking affect. A much important red flag ought to be that she is making an accusation on fucking YouTube. Naomi is so confident. Her sobbing doesn't come off as fake to me, but it is very much theatrical. As someone who followed this in real time, my honest Occam's razor is that this incident is a Russian psyop. Did J.D. Vance script this whole exchange? That is what I tell myself so I can sleep at night.

JackNoir1115: Yes. There was something very insincere about the way she kept saying "this is so disgusting" in her story.

Significant_Sample87: I was a follower of hers on Instagram and DeviantArt for years (not anymore since this bullshit, of course). She's a talented artist but also legitimately, seriously, mentally ill. She made a post a few weeks before this incident talking about how she needed her psych meds upped and was having mood swings. Mental illness of course, is not your fault but it IS your responsibility.

SkweegeeS: I just can't imagine sending an accusatory video into the world as my first step. If I felt like I had been raped I would have called the cops or a women's crisis center, not posted a video. I am not saying she should have been disbelieved immediately, but wow, just going straight to very public is not something I would do.

drunk___cat: Why the fuck did she do all this? Do we know?

bobjones271828: No, we don't know. The episode had no answers beyond Jesse speculating that she had mental health issues.

Emotional_News_4714: I thought it was because she wanted to be in a relationship with the guy, but he regretted the cheating and ended things, so she took her revenge.

Significant_Sample87: I followed her art account on social media and she often talked about having bipolar disorder and was talking about being insufficiently medicated just a few weeks before this mega crashout. I knew she was struggling but never imagined it would get this bad.

kibbles137: As a woman, I can understand having regrets about sleeping with someone in a relationship, but this was just beyond messed up. I hope she gets the help she clearly needs. I hope the guy and his fiancée have genuinely moved beyond it, and can move on with their lives.

Independent_Ad_1358: I wonder how the lawsuit will end up unfolding. Would he be considered a public figure?

bobjones271828: Probably doesn't matter in this case. The fact that Naomi had deliberately sent videos to Daniel and Kayla apologizing before making defamatory lies in public rises to the "actual malice" standard legally. I'm not a lawyer, but unless Naomi can prove mental incompetence or something, I don't see how Naomi can get around the idea that the defamation was not simply factually false but also made knowing its falsity, thereby triggering the "actual malice" standard.

IamPeppeSilvia: I'm not familiar with the condition she said she had, but why in the world would someone choose to be a sex worker or seek to be a sugar baby if having sex is painful for them?

Klutzy-Sun-6648: Exactly! It shows attention-seeking behavior to join that industry willingly despite pain. It shows how unhealthy her desire for attention will go, to the point of being physically uncomfortable. But now I doubt she even has that medical condition. I think she says it for sympathy and to set up the situation that she is talking about for it to appear as sexual assaultd. Because she needs the lube!

Visablezookeeper: Most sex workers need lube because they're not actually turned on by their clients, but to answer your question: severe mental instability.

ClementineMagis: The amount of fake crying in the episode was over the top. Honestly, I knew where it was going when Fakey McFaker started the first cry fest video.

XshatteredXDreamX: That was fucking insane to listen to Naomi talk about the assault. And it was all fake? WTF?

Andthedevilissix: I'd love to watch that chick get slapped by a 55 year old Filipino nurse who's had enough of that shit already!

OvertiredMillenial: When someone says she's a sugar baby in such an unashamed and matter-of-fact way, you've got to question their character.